

WHY ENRICHMENTS

As a person, don't you feel better after you go do something fun or try something new? Dogs get that same feeling! Different enrichments do different things. The thing they all have in common is the end result, your dog(s) feel amazing! There are five big stimulations, enrichments can and will do for your dog(s), lets touch base on them!

1. Mental Stimulation

Dogs get bored just as easy if not easier than we do! Enrichments give them something to focus on, and helps prevent or minimize stress and destructive behaviors. All while working just their brains! If your dog is driving you insane, it's likely because they are bored and they are trying to show you that it's now an issue for them.

2. Physical Stimulation

Physical stimulation can look like an easy walk where they are allowed time to explore with their nose, tug-of-war, or a swim at the lake or river. These enrichments are going to help burn their physical energy. This can help them calm down and sleep well!

3. Natural Stimulation

I think we can all agree that dogs are animals. And animals have natural instincts. These are going to be things that typically get them in trouble. As much as we all love and live for our pups, holes in the yard, or chasing your dog down the street because they took off after a bunny, these are all natural instincts for them and it's going to happen now and then. So, if they are going to do it, why not do it in a way you can monitor, enjoy, and support! Giving them a safe and supervised way to do this, it helps them relax and feel more content.

4. Confidence Boost

Trying new and exciting things can boost your dogs confidence. This is super important for dogs that are shy, anxiose and need a little extra help.

5. Stronger Bonds With You

Interacting with your dog(s) with enriching activities is how you speak their language. It helps them build a stronger bond with you. It helps build trust and communication that many people miss out on. Enrichments are essential for a healthy and happy relationship with you and your furbabes.

Our staff cannot wait to spoil and love on our furbabes during their stay here at Yellowstone Kennels! Schedule your enrichment packages now!
