Malware

Malware is special software designed by criminals to infiltrate your computer networks. Without adequate protection, malware can wreak havoc with information systems and cause serious damage.

What is malware?

Malware is an umbrella term for different types of malicious software. Criminals have developed all kinds of variations, including, viruses, ransomware, worms, trojans, spyware, adware and fileless malware.

Who are the perpetrators?

Most are trained criminals who work for international organizations.

How prevalent is it?

Every day, experts detect more than a half a million incidents of malware. Every minute, four companies fall victim to ransomware attacks. Right now, 1 billion malware programs are out in the cloud.

How bad is it?

That depends on the type of malware and your defenses against it. Malware can cause a minor nuisance or catastrophic failure.

What can we do to protect our schools and municipalities?

Don't click on suspicious links or enter information into unfamiliar sites. If your computer is behaving strangely, you could be a victim.
