RANSOMWARE

Ransomware has been wreaking havoc across the United States of America. It's one of the most important threats that schools and municipalities face.

What is ransomware?

Ransomware is a type of malicious cyber threat that uses malware. A hacker lures its victim to click on a suspicious link or open a compromised file that encrypts important data. Then the hacker demands a payment for the victim to retrieve the information.

Who are the perpetrators?

Hackers from around the world operate individually or in global criminal networks to steal valuable information from victims of ransomware.

How dangerous is ransomware?

Ransomware is dangerous for because it can cost thousands, or even millions of dollars to recover from a ransomware attack. Lately, criminals don't just encrypt data, they release it if they don't receive payment.

How prevalent is ransomware?

Ransomware is one of the most widespread attacks nationwide. It's the most likely cybersecurity threat impacting typical school districts today.

How do we protect against ransomware attacks?

Cybersecurity awareness training is highly effective against ransomware.
