

WHAT IS NEURODIVERSITY?

© Jillian Enright, Neurodiversity Manitoba

Just like biodiversity, neurodiversity is necessary for the health of our species.

Political action, advocating for equal rights and the importance of diverse neurotypes for a thriving society.

Neurodiversity utilizes a social model of disability, wherein the individual is not "blamed" for being disabled. Instead, societal and environmental factors are examined to determine the barriers to accessibility and inclusion.

Neurodiversity is person-centred. Rather than trying to force a person to fit into a particular environment, we look at what changes can be made to better meet that person's needs.

Learn more at twoemb.medium.com