

Miracle Baby Still Going Strong!

Jeremy and Tammy Blair were devastated when the Doctor told them that their recently born son Kaidyn had developed a rare disease called Biliary Arteresia.

Biliary Arteresia, is a congenital process that blocks proper bile drainage from the liver. This condition causes rapid deterioration of the organ and transplantation process was the only solution for survival.

What happened over the next x months was truly an amazing story that deserves sharing with those of us who believe in a higher power and the giving of "The Gift of Life."

"Waiting is the worst part" says Tammy, Kaidyn's mom who sat by him day and night praying for a miracle. What person would wish for a tragedy to happen that would allow their child to live. Only those who have a loved one on their death bed would dare think this.

Sadly, that is what happens to anyone waiting for a transplant for themselves or a loved one.

"How could I allow myself to wish for the death of another person," she thought. "I could only hope that Kaidyn's life is now in the hands of a higher power, and I cannot allow myself to feel guilty over wishing for a miracle."

"When the Doctors told us they had a liver for Kaidyn we could only weep," explains Jeremy, Kaidyn's father.

Call them tears of joy or tears of sadness. Joy, for Kaidyn and his family, or sadness and grief for the family who recently lost a loved one.

Meeting the donor family to thank them is out of the question. The transplant associations and hospitals do not share this information. However, through the CTA, a family can direct their sincere appreciation and thank them saving their loved one's life at a time of extreme grief and sorrow.

Fortunately, at the age of one, Kaidyn received the gift he desperately needed. He continues to be active and healthy thanks to organ donation and a loving caring donor family.
