

Continue

Wwe champions guide doink

Doink the Clown '21 is featured as a playable character in the WWE Champions Roster, as part of the WWE Superstar roster in the Modern Era. Doink the Clown '21 is classed as a Chaotic Acrobat in the game. PROFILE INFO Gender Male Roster WWE Superstar Nickname / Version Clown Prince of Chaos (Merrymaking Maniac) Era Modern Era Superstar Class Acrobat Ability Style Chaotic Alternative Versions Doink the Clown Real Life Profile Doink the Clown / Matt Borne Emerging from the depths of insanity, Doink the Clown gazes into the mirror at his newly mutated form... and laughs like a maniac! In this new state, there's no telling how much mayhem and destruction he can cause, and that just fills his charred little heart with oh-so-much joy! SPECIALS: Mutated Arm Drag, Mutated Scoop Slam, Mutated Atomic Drop, Mutated Running Clothesline, Mutated Whoopie Cushion, Mutated Eye Poke FINISHER: Mutated Stump Puller TAG LINKS: Modern Era, WWE Mutants The history of pro wrestling is full of odd characters and regrettable gimmicks that fans are desperate to forget. One such gimmick, thanks to Ruthless Aggression era World Wrestling Entertainment, is Eugene. An intellectually-disabled adult who was the kayfabe nephew of Eric Bischoff, the whole concept behind Eugene was that, despite his disability, he was actually a very capable wrestler. An offensive gimmick that was positioned as a loveable underdog -- and managed to win over crowds -- Eugene’s career in WWE was short, lasting only a few years. However, given the gimmick’s infamy, it’s a strange run that’s totally worth exploring.

10 Nick Dinsmore Before he was Eugene, the performer worked under his real name, Nick Dinsmore, and was a standout in Ohio Valley Wrestling through the late 1990s and mid-2000s while also working jobber roles in both WCW and WWE. By the time Eugene made his official WWE debut, Dinsmore was highly decorated, capturing the OVW Heavyweight Championship nine times and enjoying eight runs with the Southern Tag Team Champion alongside Rob Conway. After some jobber appearances under his real name as well as working the Doink gimmick, Dinsmore finally made his debut as Eugene on an April 2004 episode of Raw, who Bischoff assigned William Regal to manage. His debut bout would occur weeks later on Raw, against former tag partner Rob Conway, now a member of La Resistance. Eugene would defeat Conway in a few minutes with a surprisingly vocal crowd on his side. After a promo where Eugene told The Rock that Triple H was his favorite wrestler, Trips took an interest in young Eugene, going as far as making him an honorary member of Evolution.

But it was, of course, an elaborate ruse -- when Eugene earned an opportunity at Chris Benoit’s World Heavyweight Title, Evolution interrupted the match, attacking both men. From there, Eugene entered a short program with Triple H, losing to The Game at SummerSlam, defeating Trips in a No DQ match on Raw, and then finally losing a Steel Cage match a week later to end the feud. Despite his accolades in OVW, Eugene would capture only title in WWE, teaming with William Regal to beat La Resistance as well as the team of Rhyno and Tajiri for the World Tag Team Title. Eugene and Regal’s reign would last two months, but Eugene would unfortunately sustain an injury that would keep him out of action. As a result, La Resistance ended up winning the titles back at a house show, with Jonathan Coachman filling in for the injured Eugene. introducción a la probabilidad y estadística mendenhall Throughout 2004 and 2005, Kurt Angle was doing a semi-frequent bit called the Kurt Angle Invitational, where if a wrestler could last three minutes in the ring with the Olympic Gold Medalist, that wrestler would win Angle’s gold medal.

In July of 2005, Eugene would return from injury after more than six months and ultimately win the gold medal by lasting the three minutes. Eugene would defend the medal in what was now the Eugene Invitational -- that is, until Angle won the title back at SummerSlam. After the Angle feud, Eugene formed a tag team with “Hacksaw” Jim Duggan, and the duo unsuccessfully challenged The Spirit Squad for the titles. After being defeated by The Spirit Squad the following month in a match with a stipulation requiring the losing team to split up, Eugene snapped and attacked his now ex-partner. Eugene’s heel run would last a few weeks and involve a beatdown of Val Venis before it was quietly forgotten about and Eugene returned to being a babyface. After mostly wrestling on WWE Heat, Eugene would undergo an image change during the summer of 2007, exchanging his signature white-and-red jacket and traditional wrestling gear for a cape and superhero tights with a great big backwards E on the chest. In other words, WWE figured out how to further infantilize the character. During that summer, Eugene would move from Raw to SmackDown, where he’d wrestle a handful of matches, including several against Chavo Guerrero as well as a shot at the WWE Tag Team Titles alongside Shannon Moore. A week after his unsuccessful tag title shot, Eugene would make the final appearance of his initial WWE run. It would be on the final SmackDown of August 2007 where Eugene would be shooting T-shirts into the crowd with a T-shirt gun, only to accidentally launch one at Mark Henry.

Henry would unceremoniously take out Eugene with a bear hug, and then cut a promo about The Undertaker. speak out intermediate answer key pdf Eugene would be released from WWE the next day. Eugene would return to WWE in the summer of 2009, wrestling a couple of house show matches and a single television bout on an August episode of Raw, losing a brief “Contract on a Pole” match against The Miz, who was posing as a masked wrestler known as The Calgary Kid. Eugene would find himself released again and then rehired in 2013 as a trainer in NXT before getting released for a third time in his career the following year. Since leaving WWE the first time, Nick Dinsmore has performed all over the place, winning a couple more OVW Heavyweight Titles as well as appearing on Ring Ka King, a short-lived TNA-produced wrestling promotion based in India. In his indie work, he sometimes wrestles under his real name or otherwise goes by Eugene or U-Gene.

While the Eugene gimmick obviously worked with fans for a short while, it’s obviously a reputation that has followed Dinsmore in the years since, perhaps overshadowing his in-ring abilities. NEXT: 10 Comedic Wrestling Characters Who Were More Cringe Than Funny