Soar to New Heights"*

Addictions and Mental Health Services Councilor Diploma Program

Course Title: 101 Relating to Self

Course Length: 30 Hours (1 week course)

Delivery Mode: blended

Prerequisites: None

Course Description:

The Exploring Self and Personal Growth course invites students on a transformative journey of self-discovery, self-awareness, and personal development. Through a combination of introspective exercises, interactive discussions, reflective practices, and experiential activities, students will gain a deeper understanding of themselves, their values, strengths, and areas for growth. This course empowers students to cultivate a positive self-image, enhance emotional well-being, and make meaningful life choices.

Learning Outcomes:

Upon successful completion of this course, students will be able to:

1. Self-Concept and Self-Esteem:

- Compare and contrast self-concept and self-esteem, identifying factors that influence each.

2. Interpersonal Communication:

- Demonstrate a comprehensive understanding of interpersonal communication, including the communication process and effective communication techniques.
- Create and apply a communication model that integrates traditional and contemporary societies, with a focus on the impact of choices on individuals and elders.

3. Cultural Knowledge and Storytelling:

- Collect and communicate stories from elders, understanding the role of oral tradition in both traditional and contemporary societies.
- Research and articulate the significance of Aboriginal languages in solidifying identity and preserving culture.

4. Healing and Self-Understanding:

- Research and describe the role of medicine wheels, sacred trees, and talking circles as tools for inner healing.
- Explore community structures and demonstrate an understanding of the historical context of Aboriginal communities.

5. Emotional Awareness and Behavior:

- Discuss the range of emotions and their expression within both non-Native and Aboriginal cultures.
- Demonstrate an understanding of how emotions influence behavior, and create strategies for managing stress effectively.

6. Comparison of Cultural Values and Needs:

- Compare Maslow's hierarchy of basic needs with teachings from Aboriginal culture, highlighting similarities and differences.
- Research traditional methods of transmitting values in both Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal cultures and examine the influence of residential schools on these processes.

7. Healing the Child Within:

- Describe the necessary steps involved in the healing process of the inner child, drawing from both contemporary psychological practices and traditional Aboriginal teachings.
- Note: This course overview provides a comprehensive framework and can be adapted to align with the specific needs and context of the educational institution and students. It is recommended to regularly update the content to reflect current trends and emerging practices in self-exploration and personal growth.

Addictions and Mental Health Services Councilor Diploma Program

Course Title: 136 Prevention Programs

Course Length: 30 Hours (1 week course)

Delivery Mode: blended

Prerequisites: None

Course Description:

Indigenous communities in Canada face unique challenges when it comes to addiction and mental health issues. These challenges are rooted in historical traumas, socio-economic disparities, and cultural disconnect. In response, various prevention programs have been developed to address these issues, promoting healing and well-being within Indigenous communities. This module explores some of these programs and their approaches.

Learning Outcomes

1. Cultural Healing and Reconnection:

Many prevention programs emphasize the importance of reconnecting Indigenous individuals with their cultural heritage as a means of healing and preventing addiction and mental health issues. These programs often involve traditional ceremonies, language revitalization, and cultural teachings. The cultural reconnection helps individuals build a stronger sense of identity and belonging.

2. Land-Based Healing:

Land-based healing programs encourage individuals to connect with the natural environment, often through activities like traditional hunting, fishing, or camping. The connection to the land is seen as a source of strength and healing, helping to reduce stress and promote mental well-being.

3. Traditional Healing Practices:

Indigenous healing practices, such as the use of smudging, sweat lodges, and traditional medicines, play a significant role in prevention programs. These practices address both physical and mental health issues, offering holistic approaches to healing.

4. Peer Support and Community Engagement:

Many prevention programs emphasize the importance of peer support and community engagement. They create safe spaces where individuals can share their experiences, seek guidance, and receive support from their peers. These programs encourage a sense of community and belonging.

5. Educational Initiatives:

Prevention programs often include educational components to raise awareness about the risks associated with addiction and mental health issues. They focus on providing information about the effects of substance abuse and mental health challenges while also teaching coping strategies.

6. Residential Treatment Centers:

Some Indigenous communities have established residential treatment centers that offer culturally sensitive rehabilitation programs. These centers provide a structured and supportive environment for individuals seeking recovery from addiction and mental health issues.

7. Trauma-Informed Care:

Trauma-informed care is a critical aspect of many Indigenous prevention programs. They recognize the impact of historical trauma on Indigenous communities and provide care that acknowledges and addresses this trauma.

8. Holistic Health Promotion:

Prevention programs often adopt a holistic approach to health, recognizing the interconnectedness of physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual well-being. This approach includes nutrition, exercise, and stress reduction strategies.

9. Access to Mental Health Services:

Many Indigenous prevention programs work to improve access to mental health services, particularly in remote and underserved communities. They advocate for culturally competent mental health professionals and work to reduce barriers to care.

10. Collaboration and Partnerships:

Successful prevention programs often involve partnerships with Indigenous organizations, governments, healthcare providers, and non-profit organizations. Collaboration helps to pool resources and expertise to support Indigenous communities effectively.

Indigenous prevention programs for addiction and mental health issues in Canada are diverse and tailored to the unique needs of each community. By focusing on cultural healing, land-based approaches, community engagement, and holistic care, these programs aim to address the root causes of addiction and mental health issues and promote well-being within Indigenous communities. Continuous support and resource allocation are essential to ensuring the success of these initiatives and the long-term health of Indigenous individuals.
