"Recognize and embrace your uniqueness. I don't think the ratios are going to change anytime soon. But, I don't think it has to be a disadvantage. Being a Black woman, being a woman in general, on a team of all men, means that you are going to have a unique voice. It's important to embrace that." - Erin Teague, Director of Product at Yahoo!

"Women no longer have an 'if I can' mindset. Now it's more about 'how I can'-be in tech, start something in tech, fund something in tech. That shift is exciting! And it happened because we created a network where we show, daily, that women are innovating." - Shaherose Charania, Co-Founder and CEO of Women 2.0

"When you enter tech, you realize that there are more men than women. You can't deny that. But, I don't think you can make that an obstacle. You can't get deterred as a female founder knowing that's the landscape. You need to ignore the naysayers (of course there will be naysayers) and surround yourself with investors who believe in you, believe in your idea, believe in the market you're going after, and believe in your ability to execute, most importantly." - Rachel Tipograph, Founder and CEO of MikMak.TV
