Reflecting on our Economic Affairs

Guest Editorial: Rene Perez Rosenbaum, Ph.D.

Dr. Flores’ editorial in the January 2020 edition of La Voz asked us to consider if we are better off today than we were last year. He emphatically answers no and calls for real change, demanding an economy that helps the middle class and the poor sustain themselves and their families, and that achieves those goals with only one parent working.

The evidence on the Michigan and U.S. economy supports Dr. Flores’ view that things are getting worse, not better, for the middle class and working poor, particularly in Michigan, ground zero for the Great Recession. While the economy has been growing and unemployment is currently at historically low levels, the number of people who work hard to make a living but still can’t make ends meet continues to grow. Such has been the case in Michigan since at least the Great Recession. According to a 2019 United Way report, 43% of Michigan’s nearly 4 million households cannot afford basic needs such as housing, childcare, food, transportation, health care, and technology, which in Michigan 2017, required a household budget of $61,272 to sustain a family of 4 at bare minimum. Of the 43% of households below that household budget amount, 14% lived in poverty and another 29% were ALICE (Asset Limited, Income Constrained, Employed) households that earn above the poverty line but not enough to cover basic needs. By comparison, 10 years earlier, the share of Michigan households not earning enough income to cover basic needs was 38%. The 5% increase over the decade reflects a 1% increase in the share of households that live above poverty and a 4% increase in the share of ALICE households that live above poverty but are unable to cover basic expenses.

The number of households below the ALICE budget threshold changes over time, both because the cost of basic needs change and because households move in and out of poverty and ALICE, as circumstances improve or worsen. The share of Michigan households unable to cover basic needs also varies by geographical areas, municipalities, and racial and ethnic groups. For example, at 37% of households below the 2017 ALICE budget threshold of $61,272, Kent County was 6 percentage points below the state average of 43% of households unable to cover basic needs that year. By comparison, in 2015, 40% of Michigan households earned income below what was the ALICE budget threshold of $56,064 at the time, but 38% of Kent County households and 51% of City of Grand Rapids households earned incomes below that amount. While 2017 data reflect a slight improvement from 2015, the number of households struggling to make ends meet in Kent County has not improved since the Great Recession of 2007, when the share of households below the ALICE budget threshold was also 37%. Additionally, nonwhite households traditionally have made up a proportionally larger share of households below the ALICE budget threshold. For example, in 2015, when 33% of White Michigan households earned below the ALICE budget threshold, 61% of Hispanic households found themselves in those challenging circumstances. Similarly, in 2017, 57% of Hispanic households compared to 33% of White households were below the ALICE budget threshold. Most importantly for Dr. Flores’ case, over the period of recovery from the Great Recession, 2010-2017, the share of Hispanic households below the ALICE budget threshold has increased by 28%.

The number of families struggling in Michigan today is numerically explained by the increasing costs of basic needs and the large number of jobs in the Michigan economy that insufficiently compensate workers to cover the rising costs of basic needs. Despite a low rate of inflation nationwide, the household budget of $61,272 required in 2017 to cover basic needs for a family of four increased by 27%. The full-time hourly wage needed to support such a budget is $30.64 an hour. However, in Michigan, 61% of jobs pay less than $20.00 per hour, with almost two-thirds paying less than $15 per hour. In the case of the most common occupation in Michigan, retail sales, where the average wage is $10.55 an hour, even if both parents work full time, they will fall short by $19,062 of the funds needed to cover a family’s basic costs. Although low wages are an issue, workers are also finding it a challenge to find full-time, continuous work. Over the last four decades, corporate American has been shifting away from an economy that provides full-time, full-benefit jobs to the ‘gig economy’ where workers are increasingly working as consultants or contingent workers, temps, freelancers, or contractors. While non-employer firms and contingent jobs contribute to GDP and job growth, workers in the gig economy often earn relatively low wages, and lack retirement plans, employer-sponsored health insurance, and worker safety protections.

Kent County and Michigan are not alone in witnessing a rise in the number of poor and ALICE households. In the U.S. today, more Americans experience poverty than at any time since the Census Bureau has published such figures, with millions more doing demanding work year after year in jobs that pay too little and offer too few benefits to adequately care for their children and parents, pay the bills, save for college, and avoid falling financially behind. In the course of the past 40 years, the middle class and low-wage workers across the country have seen their wages stagnate or even declined. Particularly since the Great Recession, the wealthiest people and companies have gained disproportionate influence in our economy and our government.

In our society today, 70% of the nation’s wealth and 45% of the nation’s income goes to the richest 10% of the population. This concentration in economic power reflects the alarming rise in economic inequality in the U.S. over the last four decades, an outcome whose origins can be traced to the reversal in the direction of national economic policy that began in earnest during the Reagan-Thatcher era of the 1980s. In 1984, for example, the households in the top 10% of the income distribution owned 25% of the nation’s wealth; but as of 2012, they owned about 40% of all wealth. Similarly, in 2013, the CEO-to-average-worker pay ratio in the U.S. was 331 to 1; 30 years ago, it was just 40 to 1. These disparities have intensified since the economic meltdown of the Great Recession, giving rise to the precarious existence of many people who lack predictability and job security. Interestingly, the change in winners and losers from the economy has not been as dramatic in other countries as in the U.S. In Norway, for example, the ratio is 58 to 1, in Germany, it’s 147 to 1.3.

Julían Castro boasts an impressive résumé. He studied at Stanford University and went to Harvard Law School for his Juris Doctor. He humbly began his political career as a member of the San Antonio City Council, and eventually became the city’s mayor.

In 2012, Castro became the first Latino to give a speech at the Democratic National Convention. President Obama offered him a position in his cabinet in 2014, and he resigned as Mayor of the city of San Antonio to accept the position of United States Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

The importance of Castro’s campaign

In June 2019, Vox reported that Castro wasn’t as well-known as other former members of the Obama administration. Since serving in the White House, he has protested family separations at the U.S.-Mexico border, and has been outspoken about anti-immigrant sentiment in the U.S.

Castro supported initiatives that would have made it easier for low-income families to have access to college education, and he was supportive of Historically Black Colleges or Universities (HBCUs). He wanted Pell Grants increased to $10,000 per year, and for students to be able to discharge their student loans through bankruptcy, if needed.

He was also the first Democrat on the presidential ticket to come up with an immigration reform proposal. At the moment, entering into the US illegally is considered a federal misdemeanor. Castro wanted to reduce the charge to a civil offense instead. His proposals would have reduced how long a potential asylum seeker could be detained, and he wanted immigration programs in the US to be independent instead of being overseen by the U.S. Attorney General, as they are now.

Castro also wanted to change policing in the US, and released a “People’s First Policing” Plan in June 2019. He called Black victims of police brutality “victims of state violence.” His plan centered on several ideas that could have had a profound effect on policing in the US: the end of biased policing, accountability for police officers that abuse their power, and improving broken relationships between police officers and their communities.

Julían Castro also supported reforms that would have helped the homeless, protected the environment, and support animal welfare. According to PBS, he supported comprehensive healthcare in the form of “Medicare for All,” and he backed gun control initiatives.

In a Rolling Stone interview on November 2019, Castro criticized the Democratic Party because it focused on white voters instead of the marginalized communities that often vote for it in droves. He had visited 30 states by the time he spoke about the nomination process for potential presidential candidates.

Castro’s campaign struggles

Castro didn’t qualify to participate in November 2019’s Democratic debate because he didn’t poll at 3%. His campaign also suffered financially, though he was often able to fundraise what was needed, he eventually laid off his South Carolina and New Hampshire staff.

Castro dropped out of the race in January and has now endorsed Elizabeth Warren. Experts are still waiting to see if the former Democratic contender will be chosen by the eventual nominee of the party to run as their Vice Presidential pick. Despite his departure, Castro has a bright political future ahead of him. He introduced many forward-thinking ideas that proved he truly cares about changing the direction of our nation. He continues to carry the hopes of millions of Americans forward. He continues to carry the hopes of millions of Americans forward.

What we lost when Julián Castro dropped out of the Presidential Race

Former Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and Mayor of San Antonio, Julián Castro ran a principled campaign to try to secure the Democratic nomination for the Presidency in 2020. With him in the running, the possibility of having a president of Latino/Hispanic descent became a reality that eludes us. Castro is a third-generation U.S. born Citizen of Mexican ancestry and has sometimes been criticized for not being fully fluent in the Spanish language. His limited Spanish didn’t limit his ability to connect with voters on immigration issues or relate to the struggles experienced by immigrants of diverse backgrounds in America.

Julián Castro has a bright political future ahead of him. He introduced several ideas that could have had a profound effect on policing in the US: the end of biased policing, accountability for police officers that abuse their power, and improving broken relationships between police officers and their communities.

THE COMMUNITY VOICE LA VOZ / FEBRUARY 2020 5

La importancia de la campaña de Castro

En junio del 2019, Vox reportó que Castro no era conocido igual que los otros anteriores miembros de la administración de Obama. El protestó las separaciones en la frontera EEUU-México, y ha condenado el sentimentalismo anti-inmigrante en el pasado.

Castro apoyó iniciativas que hubieran hecho que la preparación universitaria sea más fácil de acceder para las personas de bajos recursos, y él apoyaba a las Universidades y Colegios Históricamente Afro-Americanos (HBCUs por sus siglas en inglés). El quería que las becas Pell (Pell Grants) incrementen a $10,000 por año, y que los estudiantes puedan liberarse de las deudas de préstamos universitarios a través de la bancarrota.

También fue el primer posible candidato presidencial del partido demócrata que elaboró una propuesta para la reforma migratoria. Actualmente entrar al país ilegalmente es una delito menor. Castro quería que esto se convierta a una ofensa civil. Sus propuestas hubiesen reducido el tiempo que hubiesen limitado cuánto se puede detener a una persona que quiere obtener asilo. También querían que los programas de inmigración sean independientes en vez de que sean supervisados por el fiscal general, que supervisa las iniciativas federales de inmigración.

Castro también quería cambiar la vigilancia policial y lanzó su plan en junio del 2019, conocido en inglés como “People’s First Policing,” un plan que tomaba en cuenta al pueblo primero. Llamaba a las víctimas afrodescendientes de la brutalidad policial “victimas de violencia del estado.” Su plan tomó algunas ideas que hubiesen cambiado la vigilancia policial en los EEUU: un fin a la vigilancia policial dominada por prejuicios, rendición de cuentas de oficiales que abusen sus poderes, y la restitución de relaciones entre la policía y sus comunidades locales.

Julián Castro también apoyó a reformas que hubiesen ayudado a los indígenas, protegió el medio ambiente, y apoyó el bienestar de los animales. Según PBS, él apoyó la ampliación del seguro médico según el modelo de “Medicare para todos,” y apoyaba a iniciativas de control de armas de fuego.

En una entrevista para Rolling Stone en noviembre del 2019, Castro criticó el proceso de nominaciones del partido demócrata porque se enfocaba en los votantes blancos en vez de las comunidades marginadas que votan por ellos en grandes cantidades. El había visitado a 30 estados cuando comenzó a criticar el proceso de la nominación para los potenciales candidatos presidenciales.
Unexpected Jim Crow Experience in 2019

By Kindra A. Peterson

I would like to give remembrance to my beautiful, sweet, intelligent and beloved mother, Belinda Gibson, as it has marked 18 years since we all lost you. We all still love and miss you and appreciate all that you’ve done in the community. I hope that you are proud of me and you remain in peace. I love you, Mom.

Aunque un estudio de su historia racial debe hacerse durante todo el año, hay ciertos meses en los que se le da un aviso adicional a su herencia. Febrero es conocido por el Mes de la Historia Negra o el Mes de la Hermandad, y en marzo de 2019, tuve la oportunidad de ver la extensión de este mes celebrado. Durante este tiempo, mi hermana de herencia hispano-americana me invitó a acompañarla a Big Rapids, Michigan a la Universidad Estatal de Ferris para ver el Museo Histórico Afroamericano. Este fue un viaje espontáneo al final de la semana, la entrada fue gratuita y mi hermana y yo estábamos más que entusiasmadas de hacer una excursión histórica que no se aventuró debido a una excursión escolar. Hablamos sobre cuánto íbamos a aprender y cómo esta experiencia nos hará comprender mejor la vida. Incluso pensé para mí mismo, ‘esta experiencia me hará una mejor persona después de obtener este nuevo conocimiento que no me enseñaron en la escuela’. Hablamos sobre discriminación, injusticias sociales y, en última instancia, cómo creemos que nos sentiremos una vez que crucemos la puerta.

El primer tramo del museo ovalado contenía productos alimenticios con anuncios racistas flagrantes en las portadas, que una vez estuvieron a la venta; Estos productos permitieron y alentaron a las personas racistas a traer sus ideologías de odio existentes impresas a sus hogares. Estaba completamente desconcertado, porque muchos de los productos alimenticios eran aptos para niños y visualmente atractivos con una multitud de colores. Este tipo de estrategia de marketing envía mensajes odiosos y subliminales a los niños que les harán creer que el racismo está bien, mientras que también se les enseña odio en casa. Luego vi más muñecas Sambo de las que había visto en toda mi vida. El hecho de que las personas tuvieran estas figuras despectivas en su hogar como recordatorios decorativos de odio, ilustra cómo los trastornos mentales de esas personas. Además, si odias a un grupo de personas, ¿por qué querrías mirar las cosas que te recuerdan de ellas? Este tipo de mentalidad es enferma y retorcida y apunta a una obsesión peligrosa. Curiosamente, debido a la gran atención de las redes sociales en torno a las injusticias violentas y sociales relacionadas con muchos afroamericanos, el anfiteatro de la Universidad Estatal de Ferris nos informó a mí hermana y a mí que están recibiendo donaciones todos los días de los artefactos racistas. El anfiteatro declaró que tal vez las personas que posean los artefactos ahora se dan cuenta de que no es correcto tener esas cosas en su hogar. Mi hermana y yo notamos, poco después de recibir la información sobre los artefactos, que la mayoría del museo contenía racismo contra los afroamericanos.

Lo positivo de mi experiencia de Jim Crow es que el resto de 2019 se ha llenado de recorrer otros dos museos que contenían historia africana y afroamericana. Tengo sed de visitar museos sobre mi gente en todo el estado y más allá ahora. Como personas, no solo debemos recorrer los museos debido a una excursión escolar, sino también por nuestro propio conocimiento de uno mismo y de la verdad.
Ten years before Rosa Parks was arrested for refusing to give up her seat on a bus, César Chávez had been arrested and put in jail for sitting in a White section of a movie theater in California. Standing up against injustice was rare at that time. America legally deported millions of Mexican American citizens during the 1930’s, calling it repatriation. We survived by remaining silent to abuse, hostile glares, and racial insults. Our children were shamed into feeling inferior because of their skin color and language.

We must raise objection to the national image assault the White House has conducted against Hispanic/Latinos in the U.S. and the Americas. Such violations of our rights as citizens caused by promoting mischaracterizations and stereotypes are objectionable. According to the President, his acts of defamation are justified by the need to build a wall at our southern border.

The U.S. Latino population is in crisis. Latinas are receiving inferior treatment in hospitals, there are increased hate crimes, children are being separated from their parents, immigrants are caged and held in concentration-like facilities. Infant deaths among defenseless immigrants held in deplorable conditions are unacceptable. Redlining by rogue real estate agents further segregate us. A call for national civil disobedience campaign. I propose a Letter Campaign first informing the President we’re fed up with his behavior! Ya Basta! By writing in English and Spanish to the President and our lawmakers, millions of us in this nation will help challenge this administration. We know how the White House feels about Mexicans and other people from “S... hole countries”. Let the White House know we must begin to value diversity in America. I recently wrote such a letter to President Trump and a month later I am still waiting for a response.

We must increase non-violent marches, protests, sit-ins, and disruptions reminiscent of the Civil Rights Era, while promising a landslide of voters against this administration in November.

We must reject our second-class citizen status and demand a place at the table via our voting power. Let’s escalate protesting the deliberate attacks on Latino culture in America.

America claims to be a nation of immigrants. This changes when descendants of those men refer to immigrants imprisoned at the border as criminals. Whether we disagree with open borders or not, keeping children in cages to stop immigration violates our national conscience. Latino Americans deserve better and it’s up to us to demand it. Remember America’s leaders they must come to us for our vote! We must force Washington to recognize our political power. Let’s demonstrate bilingualism is more useful and preferable to monolingualism.

Latino teenagers, young adults and college students should be proud of their ethnicity. Our campaign must create this pride in people. Latinos with a Facebook and twitter must take their place in the ranks of those who oppose injustice. Share the message! Tweet and ReTweet!

We are the keepers of our traditions. We are in charge of our history, not the descendants of the people who arrived here, discovered us, and now deprive us full citizenship. Over generations these tyrants have stripped away relevant elements of our history, culture, and identity. They have used their concept of God to subjugate us. They’ve persisted on criticizing us until instilling shame in our children for being different. Over generations this has culminated in making us and outsiders in our own land.

These self-appointed judges have demeaned and betrayed us until many of us no longer teach our children Spanish and minimize or deny our ethnicity.

Help our nation turn the page from racism to inclusion, prove the spirit of brotherhood still exists, and respect and support us as equals!

Diez años antes de que Rosa Parks fuera arrestada por negarse a renunciar a su asiento en un autobús, César Chávez había sido arrestado y encarcelado por sentarse en una sección blanca de una sala de cine en California. Hacer frente a la injusticia era raro en ese momento. Estados Unidos deportó legalmente a millones de ciudadanos mexicanos durante la década de 1930 y yo llamé repatriación. Sobre vivimos al permanecer en silencio ante el abuso, las miradas hostiles y los insultos raciales. Nuestros hijos se avergonzaron de sentirse inferiores debido a su color de piel y lenguaje.

Jorge hace un llamado para una campaña nacional de desobediencia civil. ¡Propongo una Campaña de cartas informando primero al Presidente que estamos hartos de su comportamiento! Ya Basta! Al escribir en inglés y español al Presidente y a nuestros legisladores, millones de nosotros en esta nación ayudaremos a desafiarnos a esta administración. Sabemos cómo se siente la Casa Blanca con respecto a los mexicanos y otras personas de “países ...”. Deje que la Casa Blanca sepa que debemos comenzar a valorar la diversidad en Estados Unidos. Recientemente escribí una carta así al presidente Trump y un mes después todavía estoy esperando una respuesta.

Ford Airport Sets Record for Seventh Straight Year, Surprises GRRand Passengers

The Gerald R. Ford International (GFIA) Airport has set a new all-time passenger record for 2019, marking the seventh consecutive year that the Airport has seen record-setting growth.

In 2019, 3,587,767 passengers flew in and out of GFIA, an increase of 9.88-percent from 2018. December growth helped cap the record-setting year with an increase of 12.85-percent year-over-year. December 2018 saw 275,681 total passengers, but 2019 surpassed that with 311,111 enplaned and deplaned passengers. The Ford Airport has seen growth in 77 of the last 84 months, and 27 straight.

GFIA celebrated the milestone by surprising two lucky passengers last month.

Karen Burleson from Caledonia, a Southwest Airlines passenger, and Keith O’Brien from Comstock Park, a Delta Air Lines passenger, were chosen as the “GRRand Passengers” as they deplaned their flights.

GFIA monthly passenger statistics are available on our website: https://www.grr.org/history.php.

American Latinos United launches super PAC in effort to defeat Donald Trump in 2020

In a bid to capture one of the most quickly growing segments of American voters, American Latinos United has launched a new political action committee focused on defeating President Trump in the upcoming 2020 presidential race. Led by former Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa and entrepreneur Fernando Espuelas, the committee will specialize in Latino voter engagement in key swing states in hopes of propelling the Democratic nominee, whoever that turns out to be, to victory.

"President Trump captured about 30% of the Hispanic vote in 2016. If he falls under that threshold in 2020, key battleground states will be out of his reach," Espuelas said in a statement. "With the Electoral College in play, we intend to empower Latinos in battleground states to defeat Trump with their votes."

The committee said it is looking to take advantage of its veteran politicians and technological innovation in order to craft messaging directed at Latinos as well as engaging in on-the-ground activation. Using traditional media and digital media platforms, their team will engage voters in Arizona, Florida, North Carolina, Michigan, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

Also, ALU will attempt to connect with single-issue voters that have not historically voted for Democratic candidates in hopes of "educating them about the moral danger that Trump represents."

"Our country is on a precipice. President Trump’s incompetence and corruption are threatening our democracy and the American way of life," said Villaraigosa, who was mayor of L.A. from 2005 to 2013 and unsuccessfully ran for governor of California in 2018.

"Latino voters can make all the difference -- if we know how to engage and activate the millions of people that sit out most elections," he added. "Through ALU, we’ll connect deeply with our community and create the mechanisms to turn out the vote in historic proportions."

Trump launched his own initiative aimed at Hispanic voters, called "Latinos for Trump," last year and held a rally in September in New Mexico. The rally featured an awkward exchange when he introduced Hispanic Advisory Council member Steve Cortes, asking him if he loved Hispanics or the country more. Trump’s , largely coming from Mexico, has caused a rift between him and Hispanic voters.

About 40.4% of eligible Latino voters came out to the polls during the 2018 midterm elections -- about 11.7 million voters in total. A record 32 million Latinos are expected to be eligible to vote in 2020, making them the nation’s largest minority for the first time.

Recognizing the modern economic system is quite complex, what can be done at the federal, state, and local levels of government to improve the conditions of the eroding middle class and working poor? Given our unstable market economy, which is incapable of generating enough good paying jobs for all who need one, and given our society’s prevailing social and political tendencies, which often blame the problem of poverty on the poor themselves, it behooves us to leverage our political rights in defense of the rights of all people, particularly the poor, to jobs that pay enough to cover basic needs. It is in our collective interest to make economic security and wellbeing a political priority in our current highly charged political environment. Our voice for change needs to be heard.

Respectfully,
Rene Perez Rosenbaum, Ph.D.
Associate Professor of Community Economic Development, School of Planning, Design, and Construction, Michigan State University and member of the ALICE Research Advisory Committee for Michigan
By 1966, Cesar Chavez had been a labor leader and civil rights activist for more than a decade. In March 1966, he and others marched from Delano, California to Sacramento – an approximate 300 miles – to have the demands of Mexican and Filipino farm workers heard, as well as to bring national attention to the mistreatment of farm workers. 1966 was the same year that Martin Luther King, Jr. sent Chavez a telegram that acknowledged his work and detailed why they were allies.

“As brothers in the fight for equality, I extend the hand of fellowship and good will and wish continuing success to you and your members. The fight for equality must be fought on many fronts – in the urban slums, in the sweat shops of the factories and fields. Our separate struggles are really one–a struggle for freedom, for dignity and for humanity.”

“...and in determination that our dreams for a better tomorrow will be realized.”

There was a mutual respect between Chavez and MLK. 10 years after his death, Chavez wrote a piece on the civil rights leader for Maryknoll Magazine. Chavez said that MLK led the way through his nonviolence, which inspired the United Farm Workers' philosophy.

“It has been our experience that few men or women ever have the opportunity to know the true satisfaction that comes with giving one’s life totally in the nonviolent struggle for justice,” he wrote. “Martin Luther King, Jr., was one of these unique servants and from him we learned many of the lessons that have guided us. For these lessons and for his sacrifice for the poor and oppressed, Dr. King’s memory will be cherished in the hearts of the farm workers forever.”

Para 1966, César Chávez había sido un líder laboral y activista de los derechos civiles durante más de una década. En marzo de 1966, él y otros marcharon de Delano, California a Sacramento, aproximadamente a 300 millas, para escuchar las demandas de los trabajadores agrícolas mexicanos y filipinos, así como para llamar la atención nacional sobre el maltrato de los trabajadores agrícolas.

1966 fue el mismo año en que Martín Luther King, Jr. le envió a Chávez un telegrama que reconocía su trabajo y detallaba por qué eran aliados.

“Como hermanos en la lucha por la igualdad, extiendo la mano del compañerismo y la buena voluntad y deseo un éxito continuo para usted y sus miembros. La lucha por la igualdad debe librarse en muchos frentes: en los barrios marginales urbanos, en las tiendas de sudor de las fábricas y los campos. Nuestras luchas separadas son realmente una: una lucha por la libertad, la dignidad y la humanidad ”. “Usted y sus compañeros de trabajo han demostrado su compromiso de corregir errores graves forzados sobre las personas explotadas. Estamos juntos con usted en espíritu y en la determinación de que nuestros sueños para un mañana mejor se hagan realidad ”.

Read the 1966 Telegram Where MLK Tells Cesar Chavez “Our Separate Struggles Are Really One

This week our country and the world celebrates the birth, life and legacy of Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., a man for all seasons and all people. It is very fortunate that this commemoration comes at the beginning of the year to remind and strengthen our resolve to work for the betterment of our lives, individual and collective in the coming year. Though his life was cut woefully short, there is so much to recall of his myriad contributions, I'd like to share some memories related to Dr. King's work in regard to the Chicano Movement, the Mexican American struggles for justice and peace during Kings' time.

In the months before his death April 4, 1968 at the hands of US racism, King was spearheading the mobilization of a poor people's campaign during a critical presidential election year in our country. It was meant to be an independent peoples clarion call for reestablishing and strengthening the “war on poverty” instead of continuing the war in Vietnam. He also saw extending the consciousness of the need for civil and economic justice to other racially and nationally oppressed and all the poor. Dramatically and meaningfully he reached out to the Chican@ movement and began meeting with key militant grassroots leaders notably Bert Corona, Corky Gonzales and Reies Tijerina to be involved on the ground floor of the poor peoples campaign.

In calling out to these leaders, King knew what he was doing. I have to admit that I as a student leader at UCLA at the time was not familiar with their names as the mass media afforded little coverage of the growing movements Corona, Gonzalez and Tijerina were leading. Indeed they were other blackballed or disparaged by the corporate media. King knew though that they were real leaders on burning issues. He also knew that reaching out to the Chicano movement centered in the Southwest would tremendously empower the nationwide struggles for justice and peace for that key election year and the future. King not only talked the talk, he walked the walk.

King reached out to Chicanos in many other ways he publicly and privately supported the efforts of Cesar Chavez, Dolores Huerta, and the farmworker union movement they were building. In the Spring of 1963 in crossing the country to build the March on Washington where he gave his “I Have a Dream” speech, King made a special move towards Mexican Americans when he came to Los Angeles. A large rally of 20,000 or more came to hear him at L.A.’s Wrigley Field (then home of the minor league Los Angeles Angels and now the site of Jackie Robinson Park) among the special guests were the Mexican American city councilman of Crystal City, Texas, who were elected the majority of a previous all-white local government in rural South Texas that year. This clearly signaled that the voting and other civil rights of that historic campaign were for Mexican Americans and other minorities along with African Americans.

The impact of King's work on the movement for social justice of Chicanos is in-calcuable. For example, in the student elections at my high school, Benjamin Franklin, in the fall after King's “I Have A Dream” speech, in a surprise for all for the first time, a Mexican American was elected president though we were only about a quarter of the students.

Indeed the Vice President and the “Boys League” president were also Mexican Americans. I was elected president, Jorge Aguinaga vice president, and Rudy Beas Boys League president. Jorge and I got involved in the Chicano movement later at UCLA as members of the United Mexican American Students, Rudy died in Vietnam.

King’s birthday comes at a time the Congress returns to session and his legacy is much needed to influence the House and Senate. The legacy is already there in key ways. The Voting Right Act has made possible a large Congressional Black Caucus, along with the Congressional Hispanic Caucus and Asian Pacific America Caucus which work together today as the “Tri-Caucus”. On many issues they are joined by the Congressional Progressive Caucus which makes for the “Quad Caucus”. These are very important components of a peoples power base for progressive change that can be built on this year and make a difference on winning gains on the final health care reform bill, for immigrant and labor rights, jobs, environmental survival, money for peace and not war and many other issues.

As could be expected, the corporate media is building a mood of pessimism about the possibilities for progressive change, they did so for King and the movements he led, but he was undaunted and we shouldn't be in this years struggles. Si Se Puede! ¡Feliz cumpleaños Martin!

Abstract: The Island of Puerto Rico recently has faced many natural climate and geographical changes. The people of Puerto Rico also are regular avid cellphone users but virtual education is still not seen as a viable method for their personal development. As a United States territory, for 100 years, Puerto Rico has tried to emulate the old model federal education systems but they have not worked for the majority of the student population. At the present, the economical constraints of a 70 billion dollar debt and a failing education system it is imperative to use other new ways of learning that help students educate themselves without having to be a victim old models of education. This paper will attempt to explore all the challenges faced by teachers and learners during natural disasters and emergency situations. It will also explore the solutions for all the challenges faced as an attempt to serve as a reference for all educators around the world with similar learning situations. The author will propose some suggested solutions so that the island can start moving towards the integration and development of virtual education.

New Technologies

New technologies have changed the way education and learning attainment is delivered. Not only academic spaces, schools, distance, and time has been accommodating for learners, but information has developed and evolved into a multimedia stream of learning opportunities regardless of economic, social, and geographical constraints. E-books, YouTube videos, social networks and self-produced material is viewed around the world by billions daily.

Many countries are using formal and informal learning Internet resources and tools to increase the academic opportunities available to their citizenry and for stimulating positive change in their countries.

As we all have seen all too often during the past few years, there are times when the weather and earthquakes affect countries with catastrophic results on the population. It is interesting to mention that some countries such as Haiti, China, and the mainland of the United States have used their negative experiences with weather as a springboard to start using new ways of learning because schools have been destroyed, internet has been cut off, power has been interrupted, and roads have been flooded or are impassable, but the need for learning has been a priority.

Some of the states such as Mississippi and Louisiana has banned online learning from their K-12 schools until they experienced Hurricane Katrina.

The Immediate Educational Challenges

Most recently, the author has experienced two hurricanes and a 6.5 earthquake in Puerto Rico. These natural disasters have put a stress to the educational, social, economic, and political situation on the three million citizens living in the island. As a result of the disasters, hundreds of homes, many school buildings, power lines, power company generators, internet lines, and roads have been destroyed leaving students without the immediate place for learning. Public transportation is nonexistent and private transportation is very expensive for poor students to access. This has left parents as de facto transporters of their children to far away unsafe school buildings that do not offer quality education programs.

The challenges are many, the island of Puerto Rico still shakes but students still have to learn and people still need to continue working using new systems that do not rely on a specific building, power lines and cable internet.

Virtual Learning is still viewed as an intruder to the formal way of classroom learning. It is still perceived by local educators and faculty as a low quality learning delivery system. This author has received multiple negative statements and excuses about virtual learning by those faculty members and students who do not or have never used virtual learning as an alternative.

It is a reality that virtual learning is not for all students or faculty. This must not be an excuse to impede or prevent a new way of learning for those who wish to study and do not have the time, money, or transportation to visit a regular school, college or university.

College and University Focus More on Administration Issues

As a faculty member and educational researcher on the island, this author has witnessed many interesting, mind-numbing, and precarious situations. Most colleges and universities worry more about the administrative system they use than the effectiveness of their educational systems. Colleges and universities pay high sums of money for LMS systems that could easily be substituted by other open source or locally developed systems.

Traditional versus Online

It is also a fact that most of the teaching in the twenty-first century is blended or fully online. Traditional lecture-based methods discourage many students because they do not motivate or encourage learning and exploration. Many faculty members in Puerto Rico lack online and blended teaching methods and activities that encourage problem solving. Programs are mostly face-to-face sessions of the utmost drudgery and, on top of that, they require sitting in class in an unsafe building.

To make matters worse, local teacher training and certification programs in the Island of Puerto Rico are still encouraging the old classroom methods and do not teach any of their K-12 courses online. There are accreditation entities that also do not discourage virtual learning and require many unfounded requirements for the new methods to be approved. In other words, they are not proposing the new ways of teaching and learning any time soon. Apparently, they are heading backwards to their future and being pummeled by hurricanes and earthquakes in the process.

Old Course Structure Must Change Its Format

Virtual learning must have a course format that is not solely based on cover material for testing. It’s a great challenge to explain why virtual education requires new ways of delivery that include videos, audio, forums, reflection statements, projects, and problem solving. It may also include project production using new tools for inquiry and research.

Technical Challenges Faced by Teachers in Puerto Rico

1. Lack of reliable internet. Internet inconsistency is a major barrier to progressive forms of learning; teachers cannot properly plan their class activities and students are demotivated when in the midst of what would be exciting projects if only they could complete them. Schools in Puerto Rico have typically 5 megs of bandwidth per room. Not only are the pipes not wide, they are not reliable for students. For instance, all YouTube videos are blocked.

2. Lack of computers and equipment. Students have access to computers once a week for less than one hour. This is not enough time to develop their digital skills for the workplace and it is often time wasted in a frantic search on Google for the needed content.

3. Lack of electrical power. Since the island has an unreliable power system, it is not capable of having power for a robust computer lab in every school.

School and Virtual Learning in Puerto Rico

To conclude, this author believes virtual education is the answer. It will not replace classroom learning but allow all students to benefit of being able to learn at their own pace, any time, and anywhere. Despite having the limitations described above, this author has used virtual learning for 20 years and still see a viable method of learning.
4. Lack of teacher training on virtual education teaching tools and innovative methods. Most teachers do not have technology teacher training on virtual education teaching methods. They just have teacher training on the basic use of Microsoft Office.

5. Lack of online materials and activities. Teachers in Puerto Rico do not have online materials and activities they can share for all school levels.

6. Lack of Technical Support. Centralized systems of support result in a highly bureaucratic system that is not reliable. If the system is down, teachers may have to wait for weeks or months before they are helped.

Solutions for Positive Change

Puerto Rico must provide the opportunity for public school students to enroll in online quality courses. All teacher preparation programs must include an aggressive virtual education component for all teachers that may include empowering activities.

The use of cell phones for online instructions must be encouraged by all Puerto Rico education systems. At present, cell phones are not allowed to be used in public school classrooms. Given all the tragedies my fellow countrymen have experienced during the past few years, this should be considered criminal.

All university systems must improve all teacher preparation programs to encourage the use of technology and online learning at all levels of instruction. They must also provide online courses for students to take at any time so that course offerings are not limited by dates, times, or space.

Virtual multimedia course lessons must be produced by all teachers and faculty so that materials are available for students including ebooks and podcasts. The elimination of paper and pencil lessons must be encouraged by all teachers. The use of blackboard and chalk may also be discouraged and transformed to a virtual mode of teaching requiring student reflections.

The use of cellphone hotspots for internet access must be encouraged and taught to all students and faculty so that they are not limited by the lack of internet access provided by schools.

Solar power systems for charging cellphone, technology equipment, and classrooms must be acquired and available.

All teachers must take 12 credits of virtual learning methodology so that teachers can help change the old boring way of teaching.

Micro networks of solar power, batteries and wifi must be acquired and installed for all educational institutions.

Teacher training and time for teacher collaboration must be available at all times by using virtual learning.

These solutions are just the beginning of a long list of suggestions which may be provided as a book in the near future. Puerto Rico is still under emergency status due to the constant strong earth shakes in the southwest part of the island. Moving quickly to a virtual education system for students will help these young learners and future leaders keep up-to-date with all school work and requirements.

We did it! ‘Dora’ cast revels in a rare Hollywood film full of Latinos

Actress Isabela Moner says she didn’t expect so much action when she signed up for “Dora and the Lost City of Gold,” about the adventurous Latina explorer.

While the live-action film is based on a popular children’s cartoon character that debuted in 2000, “Dora and the Lost City of Gold” presents a new, older version of the character. The film’s Dora is encountering society for the first time in years when she is sent to California for high school.

The film features a large Latino cast, a rarity for a major Hollywood production.

Mexican actor Eugenio Derbez, also a producer of the movie, plays a mysterious explorer, while Eva Longoria is Dora’s mom and Chicago native Michael Peña is Dora’s dad. Jeff Wahlberg, who is of Dominican descent, plays Dora’s famous cousin, Diego. And Benicio Del Toro is the voice of Swiper, the fox that steals Dora’s things in the animated series.

A kidnapping whisks Dora, Diego and two other teens to the jungle, where they must work to help save her parents and solve the mystery of a lost city.

For Moner, who was born in Cleveland and learned Spanish as a first language through her Peruvian mom, playing Dora presented the opportunity to explore her own heritage.

The movie contains several lines in Spanish as well as Quechua, prompting Moner to call her great aunt in Peru during filming so she could ask about some words in the indigenous language, spoken in the Peruvian Andes and the highlands of South America.

“I felt closer to my culture, my roots,” Moner said. With the live-action movie, Derbez expects moviegoers to have fun.

La actriz Isabela Moner dice que no esperaba tanta acción cuando se inscribió en “Dora y la ciudad perdida de oro”, sobre la aventurera exploradora latina.

Si bien la película de acción en vivo se basa en un popular personaje de dibujos animados para niños que se estrenó en 2000, “Dora y la ciudad perdida de oro” presenta una nueva versión más antigua del personaje. Dora de la película se encuentra con la sociedad por primera vez en años cuando es enviada a California para la escuela secundaria.

La película presenta un gran elenco latino, una rareza para una importante producción de Holly-
10 Ways to Boost Your Energy in 10 Minutes or Less

¿Están sus párpagos caídos a medida que avanza la tarde? Cuando la baja energía lo deprime, no busque una barra de chocolate, una taza de café o una bebida energética para levantarlo. El azúcar y la cafeína pueden darte un estímulo inmediato, pero después de que el efecto rápido desaparezca, te estrellarás y te sentirás aún más agotado.

1. Come tu desayuno. Las personas que desayunan todas las mañanas informan menos fatiga y estrés que las personas que lo omiten. Los alimentos ricos en fibra, como la avena caliente, se quedan contigo más tiempo que un pan dulce o una masa.

2. Hacer un perro hacia abajo. Algunos estudios han encontrado que el yoga, que utiliza diversas posturas y respiración profunda para hacer ejercicio y meditación, puede ser un excelente luchador contra la fatiga.

3. Pon tu canción favorita. Cantar te da una especie de emoción emocional mientras reduce los niveles de hormonas del estrés en tu cuerpo. Así que toma un copiloto, pon tu canción favorita y canta. Si estás en el trabajo y no quiere enfrentarse a las miradas perplejas de sus compañeros de trabajo, puede guardar sus estilos vocales para el automóvil.

4. Tome un trago de agua. La deshidratación puede hacerte sentir agotado y fatigado. No necesariamente tiene que seguir la regla de “ocho vasos al día”, pero sí desea beber suficiente agua para mantener su cuerpo bien hidratado.

5. Vuélvete loco. Coma un puñado de almendras o cacahuetes, que son ricos en magnesio y ácido fólico (ácido fólico). Estos nutrientes son esenciales para la producción de energía y células.

6. Agarra una rama de canela. Algunas personas dicen que solo una bocanada de esta especia perfumada puede reducir la fatiga y hacer que se sientan más alertas. No hay canela a mano? Toma una menta de tu bolso. El dulce aroma de la menta es otro luchador contra la fatiga para algunas personas. Se necesita más investigación para ver si estos aromas realmente afectan el nivel de energía de una persona y cómo lo hacen.

7. Muévete. El ejercicio es un refuerzo de energía natural, porque cada vez que lo haces, la sangre rica en oxígeno aumenta a través de tu cuerpo hacia tu corazón, músculos y cerebro. Exprimir regularmente un entrenamiento en tu día, incluso si puede dedicar solo 10 minutos a la vez, ayudará a mantener sus niveles de energía en su punto máximo.

8. Deja que entre la luz del sol. La investigación sugiere que solo unos minutos de caminar afuera en un día cálido y despejado puede mejorar el estado de ánimo, la memoria y la capacidad de absorber nueva información. Salir a la calle puede incluso mejorar tu autoestima. Si absolutamente no puede salir, al menos abra las persianas.

9. Tener un bocado. Su cerebro necesita combustible para funcionar al máximo. Cuando su nivel de azúcar en la sangre baja, su mente comenzará a funcionar con vapores y se sentirá borroso como resultado.

10. Salir con amigos optimistas. Las emociones son sorprendentemente contagiosas. Las personas que están constantemente negativas y deprimidas pueden agotar su energía, mientras que aquellas que siempre están excitadas y entusiasmadas pueden darle un impulso real.

ANOTHER MICHIGAN FAMILY FUN CAR CLUB!

Scooter is humbled and proud to be bringing the OUTTA CONTROL CAR CLUB based in Saginaw to LA VOZ readers. Their club emblem tells it all for sure! The club member photo shows that they have more than a few members. Also, the age spread is cool, plus they really do let their children be involved and have a good time.

That red 4 door on show style display members ride can’t be done justice with one picture. The list of custom modifications, besides the award winning paint, are off the charts! The model posing with the black and white 1958 Chevy could very well be a model for any number of car hobby magazines. You can hardly see it but it’s got an old school metal flake painted roof and the bottom white paint has some custom paint features too.

Check out the OUTTA CONTROL young man that’s reading the 58 Chevy’s car information sign. I’d bet he actually knows much, if not all of what’s on it. And I don’t know how old or young the dog that’s wearing the club shirt is, but he/she is a dedicated club supporter. I hope you can see the club doing the familia thing at a drive-in. I must remind you all, that if you get a chance and see Low Rider clubs around, generally speaking, they are not opposed to questions and many of them will let your child stand by their favorite ride or maybe even be asked to sit in one as mom or dad takes a picture.

I have to say this because a large number of you reading my column are not old car/Low Rider owners. So I’ll toss out the general spectator rules.

1. Never touch any part of a car. 2. Please have your pet elephant, cougar, dog, cat or children under control. 3. Be sure to keep your food far enough away that it will not splash or melt on some of the displayed trophies and or their vehicles.

Next up you have caught the Club’s 63 Chevy, 58 Chevy, 64 Chevy and the red mini truck taking a rest/break, letting their rides just relax and letting them be checked out and pose for pictures.

To cross the finish line featuring the OUTTA CONTROL CAR CLUB. Wow! The two tone red Caddy (I think) has three wheeling and is showing how it works when you drive around a corner. And as per usual it’s been exciting for me to be able to share a small amount of the fun they have with the family. A fun bunch for sure!

No one will dispute Andy Ruiz shocked the world with his stunning defeat of Anthony Joshua. It wasn’t supposed to happen and millions had been spent to give Joshua an easy win. Everyone in the arena momentarily lost their breath as reality went eschew. Odds makers had Joshua winning easily and no one expected Ruiz to show so much courage. This was a mistake. After fifty years of boxing I’ve rarely seen a Mexican American boxer who did not also have the heart of a fighting bull. This is often to their downfall, as it becomes instinctual and not tactical fighting strategy.

Andy is a boxer with the ability to remain calm while under attack that excites audiences. Ruiz proved having a heart packs more weight than rocks in your gloves. As demonstrated by the coward of boxing Antonio Margarito who loaded his wraps with plaster of Paris powder that hardened when wet. This fight also had the optics of the battle of a David and Goliath rematch. Yet, the battle was not good verses evil, but of a subordinate challenging a superior. Boxing analysts suggest Andy Ruiz pretended to be humble while hiding his tiger’s stripes. Its true Sun-Tzu says War is deception but this is giving Ruiz too much credit of playing the fool to trick the gatekeeper. They overlooked the obvious, Ruiz has always fought larger men because he is short for a heavyweight.

The infamous Marvin Haggler said, “You can’t get up and do roadwork at five o’clock in the morning when you’re sleeping in silk sheets.” Joshua has had 21 knock outs in 21 fights and saw short fat Andy Ruiz as a nobody. English arrogance is rarely subtle and the truth is promoters have hand picked Joshua’s opponents. Unless Joshua recognizes his own weaknesses and retires a champion he will eventually be sacrificed to the almighty dollar. Prince Nasseem Hamed is one example of someone who’d been protected until the arrival of Marco Barrera.

To be successful a boxer must want to destroy his opponents. At the end of the day Andy Ruiz out fought Anthony Joshua and got in a lucky shot behind his ear. It was clearly a lucky punch that stunned Joshua who was unable to recover. Although Joshua tried to regroup, Ruiz was there to fight not just put on a show. Physically larger Joshua forgot longer arms will help if you stay on the outside and jab. Once on the inside the advantage went to Ruiz with shorter arms. This is why his loss in the rematch is so disappointing.

I was one of millions who lost his breath never believing Andy had a chance. He was a last minute replacement and Joshua looked dangerous. Boxing is only a sport outside the ring, inside its a war. As one who’s fought I’ve also knelt at the Alter of Impossible Dreams. Andy ignited expectations in the hearts of millions who’ve struggled against impossible odds and injustice. It was a real live Rocky Balboa movie. Trustingly we began planning the rematch that demanded Olympian dedication, something Andy lacked. His easy going smile hid a man-child who lacked self-discipline. Lackadaisical and juvenile Andy arrived overweight, under trained and unprepared for the biggest event of his life. His performance betrayed millions of no-bodies who’ve dreamed of greatness. His flabby jelly belly exposed his genuine self, a average man who got lucky. Truthfully, he may have lost anyway, but it would have been honorable. On top of misrepresenting himself as Mexican, he squashed the hopes of underdogs across the world. It’s difficult to find adjectives to convey my disdain for someone who throws away such an opportunity. He could have at least been honest and simply said “I am afraid.” My heart goes out to his trainer, his father, his relatives and everyone who thought they knew him. Andy will have many challenges in his future, let’s hope he takes those more seriously.

Nadie disputará que Andy Ruiz conmocionó al mundo con su sorprendente derrota de Anthony Joshua. No se suponía que sucediera y se habían gastado millones para darle a Joshua una victoria fácil. Todos en la arena perdieron el aliento momentáneamente cuando la realidad se fue. Los creadores de probabilidades hicieron que Joshua ganara fácilmente y nadie esperaba que Ruiz mostrara tanto coraje. Esto fue un error. Después de cincuenta años de boxeo, rara vez he visto a un boxeador mexicano que tampoco tenía el corazón de un toro de lidia. Esto a menudo se debe a su caída, ya que se convierte en una estrategia de lucha instintiva y no táctica.

Andy es un boxeador con la capacidad de mantener la calma mientras está bajo ataque que emociona al público. Ruiz demostró que tener un corazón tiene más peso que las rocas en los guantes. Como lo demostró el cabezudo del boxeo Antonio Margarito que cargó sus envergaduras con yeso en polvo de París que se endureció cuando estaba mojado. Esta pelea también tuvo la óptica de la batalla de una revancha de David y Goliat. Sin embargo, la batalla no era buena versus maldad, sino de un subordinado desafiando a un superior. Los analistas de boxeo suelen decir que Andy Ruiz fingió ser humilde mientras ocultaba las rayas de su tigre. Su verdadero Sun-Tzu dice que la guerra es un engaño, pero esto le está dando a Ruiz demasiado crédito de jugar al tonto como para engañar al guardián. Pasaron por alto lo obvio; Ruiz siempre ha peleado con hombres más grandes porque es bajo para un peso pesado.
Cejudo, 21 years old at the time, was the only Latino athlete to bring home gold for the United States in the Beijing Olympics in 2008, simultaneously becoming the youngest gold medalist in US wrestling history. Then, in 2018, Cejudo became the first Olympic athlete to win a UFC title when he defeated Demitirious Johnson for the UFC Flyweight Championship title.

The path to success wasn’t easy for the Los Angeles native, who is the son of two undocumented immigrants from Mexico. Cejudo is one of seven children, raised mostly by his mom, Nelly Rico, as a single parent after leaving behind Cejudo’s father, a career criminal whom he never really knew.

Cejudo continually praises the sacrifices his mother made over the years to give him and his siblings the best. She’d take any job, from janitor to construction worker, to put food on the table for them and keep up with the bills. The family moved often, from New Mexico to Phoenix to Colorado Springs, always in search of a better life.

Upon winning his gold medal in Beijing, Cejudo dedicated the metal to his mom, who watched his performance from Colorado Springs. “I wish I could just give her the medal right now,” Cejudo said.

Cejudo’s wrestling career was inspired by his older brother Angel, who was a four-time state champion, something he replicated in his own high school career. Cejudo moved to Colorado Springs after his sophomore year to become a resident athlete at the U.S. Olympic Training Center, winning the Colorado state high school championships as a junior and senior. In 2006, while in high school, he also won the USA Wrestling national freestyle championship. Soon after, he began training full-time at the Olympic training center.

Following his Olympic win, Cejudo took an extended break before officially retiring from freestyle wrestling in 2012. In 2013, he announced he would begin training for a career in MMA. He defeated Michael Poe by TKO in his debut on March 2, 2013, and over the next year, he built a record of 6-0 with three wins by TKO, one by submission, and two by decision. He was listed as the #1 ranked bantamweight prospect in the MMA (Mixed martial arts) Prospects Report prior to officially signing with the UFC.

Cejudo started 2019 by defending his 125-pound belt with a stunning finish of the bantamweight Champion T.J. Dillashaw. Then, Cejudo went on to face Brazil’s Marlon Morales for the newly-vacant UFC bantamweight championship at UFC 238 in June 2019.

Although the fight started slow for Cejudo, he came storming back to claim one of the best comeback wins of that year.

In that moment, Cejudo not only captured the vacant UFC bantamweight title, but he could now rebrand himself as “Triple C” -- Olympic champion, UFC flyweight champion and UFC bantamweight champion.

Cejudo, known as “The Messenger,” relinquished his flyweight belt before the end of the year, entering 2020 as the reigning UFC bantamweight king and looking to build on his growing star power in the UFC.

Henry Cejudo, ex luchador de estilo libre y actual campeón de la división de peso gallo en UFC, es el epitome de la historia de éxito de los latinos estadounidenses.

Cejudo, de 21 años en ese momento, fue el único atleta latino en traer oro a casa para los Estados Unidos en los Juegos Olímpicos de Beijing en 2008, y al mismo tiempo se convirtió en el medallista de oro más joven en la historia de la lucha libre estadounidense. Luego, en 2018, Cejudo se convirtió en el primer atleta olímpico en ganar un título de UFC cuando derrotó a Demitirious Johnson por el título del Campeonato de peso mosca de UFC.

Cejudo comenzó 125 libras con un campeón de peso gallo en UFC 2019 defendiendo su cinturón de sorprendente acabado del peso gallo T.J. Dillashaw Luego, enfrentó al brasileño Marlon Morales para el campeonato de peso gallo UFC recientemente vacante en UFC 238 en junio de 2019.

Cejudo, conocido como "El Mensajero", renunció a su cinturón de peso mosca antes de fin de año, entrando en 2020 como el rey reinante de peso gallo de UFC y buscando desarrollar su creciente poder estelar en el UFC.

Each month, we will feature a Latin American representing our community in professional sports in the U.S.
