Women’s History Facts

- In 2021, a record number of women led Fortune 500 companies. However, that record included only 41 women out of 500 CEOs. In other words, only 8.1% of Fortune 500 CEOs are women.
- Around the world, women comprise just 4.6% of the Global 500 CEO list. In other words, only 23 out of the 500 CEOs on this list are women.
- More women than ever before are also serving in the 117th United States Congress. But representation for women in this important branch of government is still far from equal despite some advances throughout American history. Currently, just under 27% of Congress is female.

Kimberly Bryant started her company Black Girls Code in 2011 using her 104 (k). Bryant created this nonprofit after discovering there were not many diverse computer programming courses for her daughter in the Bay Area, now she is on a mission to teach millions of young girls how to code by the year 2040.

Having struggled while studying electrical engineering in college. Bryant said, “I didn’t want my daughter to feel culturally isolated in the pursuit of her studies as I had as a young girl. I didn’t want her to give up on her passions just because she didn’t see anyone else like her in the classroom.

The White House named Bryant the Champion of Change and she was awarded the Ingenuity in Social Progress from the Smithsonian Institute.
