VA Fully Developed Claims program

Find out how you can use the Fully Developed Claims program to get a faster decision on your disability benefits claim by submitting evidence along with your claim.

You can still file a claim and apply for benefits during the coronavirus pandemic

Get the latest information about in-person services, claim exams, extensions, paperwork, decision reviews and appeals, and how best to contact us during this time.

Can I submit a fully developed disability claim?

You can submit a fully developed disability claim if you're applying for compensation for:

- An illness or injury (also called a condition) that was caused by—or got worse because of—your active-duty service, or
- A condition that was caused—or made worse—by a disability we've already determined is service-connected

What do I need to do to submit a fully developed claim?

For us to consider your claim fully developed, you'll need to:

- Submit your completed Application for Disability Compensation and Related Compensation Benefits (VA Form 21-526EZ), and
- Submit all the evidence (supporting documents) you have—or can easily get—along with your claim, and
- Certify that there's no more evidence we might need to decide your claim, and
- Go to any VA medical exams required for us to decide your claim. We'll let you know if you need any exams.

What evidence will I need to submit along with my disability claim?

You'll need to send us:

- All private medical records related to the claimed condition, like reports from your own doctor or X-rays or other test results from a non-VA hospital or other treatment center, and
- Any records of medical treatment you've received for the claimed condition while serving in the military, and
- Any military personnel records you have that relate to the claimed condition, and
- Information about any related health records that you don't have but that we can request on your behalf from a federal facility like a VA medical center or clinic

If you think your service records don't include a description of your disability, you can also submit letters from family members, friends, clergy members, law enforcement personnel, or those you served with that can tell us more about your claimed condition and how and when it happened.

Note: In 1973, a fire at the National Personnel Records Center (NPRC) in St. Louis destroyed records held for Veterans who were discharged from the Army and Air Force during certain periods of time. Your records may have been destroyed in the fire if you were discharged from the Army between November 1, 1912 and January 1, 1960, or if you were discharged from the Air Force between September 25, 1947 and January 1, 1964. If you think your records may have been involved in this fire, you can learn more about the fire and how to get help filing a claim.

Are there any risks to using the Fully Developed Claims program?

No. Filing a fully developed claim won't affect the attention we give to your claim or the benefits you're entitled to receive.

If we determine that we need other non-federal records to make a decision on your claim, we'll simply remove the claim from the Fully Developed Claims program and process it as a standard claim.

Once you start your fully developed claim, you'll have up to 1 year to complete it. If we approve your claim, you'll be paid back to the day you started it.

What should the evidence show to support my disability claim?

This depends on the type of claim you're filing.

Can VA help me gather evidence?

Yes. We can help you through the Fully Developed Claims program.

We'll:

- Request your military service records (with your permission), and
- Request relevant Social Security benefits information and medical records that you identify and authorize us to get from a federal facility, like a VA medical center, and
- Schedule a health exam for you or get a medical opinion from a health care provider if we decide we need it for your claim

Note: Even though we'll gather federal records (like your DD214 or VA medical records) on your behalf, we encourage you to submit these if you have them to save time in the process.

When should I turn in my evidence?

To submit your claim through the Fully Developed Claims program, you'll need to turn in the information and evidence at the same time as you file your claim. If you turn in more information or evidence after you send in your fully developed claim, we'll remove your claim from the FDC program and process it as a standard claim.

If we decide your claim before 1 year from the date we receive the claim, you'll have the rest of that 1-year period to turn in additional information or evidence to support your claim.

How do I turn in my information and evidence?

You'll need to upload all medical evidence or supporting documents at the end of the disability compensation form.

You can start your online application right now, or find out how to file a claim by mail, in person, or with the help of a trained professional.

Should I work with a Veterans Service Officer (VSO) to file my claim?

You don't have to, but we encourage you to work with an accredited VSO. These trained professionals can help you file your claim and gather the needed medical records and evidence.
