

Cucumber and Green Tea Dove

(By: SoapyOne)

If you haven't noticed yet, Lever Brothers has a new Dove bar on the market. It is Cucumber and Green Tea Cool Sensation Dove.

It has a nice scent, I will let you know how it lathers... later. lol

I was working on laundry yesterday, folding and hanging some clothes, and I must have let a word slip... as Mary walked into the laundry room with one of the new bars of green Dove. She held it over my large glass of ice water. She dipped the end of the bar into the water for a few seconds... until she got my attention... then she let the bar drop to the bottom of the glass.

As it quickly sank, it pushed the ice cubes aside. They formed a barrier that would not make it easy to get the bar of soap out of my glass.

"Don't pour out the water to get the soap out of your glass. And don't use your fingers either." she stated as a matter of fact. "Enjoy your water." she said as she turned and left the laundry room.

I quickly smelled the water and it didn't smell bad... I knew that the quicker I drank the water, the less soap would be mixed into it...

A large, 24 ounce glass of cold ice water does not go down quick. The motion of moving and tipping the glass up to drink, also mixed the bar of cucumber and green tea into more of the water. Then, if that wasn't bad enough... the soap kept dropping from the side of the glass onto the ice.

Well, it took a few minutes to finish the water. The water remaining toward the end was a lot more cloudy than the water at the beginning of my chore... and I had to continue folding clothes as well.

Any ways, as I took the last of the water, the green Dove slid down the glass into my mouth. I walked out of the laundry room after finishing the load of clothes in the dryer, and showed Mary the soap was out of the glass.

"Great! Now take the clothes upstairs, put them away. Refill your ice water and come back down here." she told me.

I did as I was told. I went upstairs, put away our clothes in our closets and dressers, and then set the laundry basket back into the corner of our bedroom. All the while not trying to get teeth marks on her new bar of green Dove. I refilled my ice water and returned to her in the lower family room.

"Go to the bath room, and remove your soap, and you had better hope there are no teeth marks in it... or you will be sorry." she said.

I went to the bath room which is across from the laundry room. I took out the soap and rinsed it off quickly, placing it on the sink. No teeth marks that I could see. I returned to the living room, without rinsing, as I was not told I could rinse yet.

"What was the water running for?" she asked.

"I rinsed the bar of Dove off, ma'am." I replied.

"Any teeth marks in it bb?" she asked. (Of course, bb stands for bubbleboy.)

"None that I could see ma'am." I answered.

"Good, now sit down here beside me, and enjoy your water. Oh! Did you rinse your glass out before refilling it?" she asked me.

"No ma'am, not without permission." I replied.

"Let me smell your glass of water." she said.

I handed her my ice water and she sniffed over the top of the glass after swishing it a little.

"Mmmm... smells like you are going to enjoy this glass too." she said as she handed it back. I could notice a couple little lite-green lines on the inside of the glass, where the soap had slid down it. "Drink up." she said.

I again drank my cucumber and green tea ice water with her watching me. I have to tell you, the taste was not bad and the water diluted the soap quite a bit... but having someone push around on your belly after drinking a couple large glasses of soapy water is just strange. lol. But who am I to argue... at least I didn't have to bite or chew the soap, and it isn't like she washed my mouth out with it... yet...

I still don't know if I said something wrong, or if she was just in a playful mood... judging by this morning... it was the later...

I hope you all try this new bar of green Dove... and let us know what you think.
