

Broken Heart, Stolen Soul

We once were stars, dared us to shine, lonely, darkened paths, I'm walking blind.
The nights are cold and truths unknown. Love now ended, leaving me more alone.
You carved a smile, then walked away, leaving echoes where all my tears lay.
The light you once were burns my eyes. Now you're a ghost that whispers lies.

You wore our love like a velvet veil, but underneath was something else.
Hollow grin with your poisoned kiss, A lie in disguise, I completely missed.
Your words were sharp like knives, actions to cut me out of our lives.
Each "forever" promise you softly said, a noose around my neck, until I'm dead.

You didn't just leave, you erased. Tore into my soul and left no trace.
Every heartbeat sounds like doom, a ticking clock inside my tomb.
My heart is broken, my soul's stolen. Left to rot where our love has fallen.
You fed me poison fire in a silver cup, watched me in silence as I drank it up.

I crawled through glass on my knees, Then to find your love was just a tease.
Your green eyes grew cold and wide, then you shut them as our love died.
Yesterday, you said you love me still, deep down, it was a lie, a poison pill.
I wore your lies beneath my skin, a second heart that beats within.

But I let the darkness have its due, made a throne from what fell through.
Nights were long, stars didn't speak, screamed in dreams, my soul is weak.
Whisper truths I dreaded to know, that even love could sink so low.
Mirrors cracked when I appeared, even my shadow has disappeared.

My heart is broken, my soul is stolen.
You were ice, turned my desires frozen.

