

Grounding & Nervous System Soothing Worksheet

What is Grounding?

Grounding is a set of simple strategies that can help you detach from emotional pain (e.g., anxiety, anger, sadness, self-harm). It is basically a way to distract yourself by focusing on something other than the difficult emotions you are experiencing. You may also think of grounding as centering, distracting, creating a safe place, or healthy detachment.

Although grounding does not solve the problem that is contributing to your unpleasant emotions, it does provide a temporary way to gain control over your feelings and prevent things from getting worse. Grounding anchors you, gives you a chance to calm down, and allows you to eventually return and address the problem that is triggering the unpleasant emotions to begin with. And grounding can be done anytime, anywhere, and no one has to know.

Ways of Grounding:

There are three types of grounding. You may find that one of these types works better for you, or that each is helpful.

	Mental	(focusing	your	mind)

- Physical (focusing your senses)
- Soothing (talking to yourself in a very kind way)

These tools are here to support you, but you don't have to figure it out on your own. Book a free call to see how therapy or coaching could help you feel more grounded, connected, and safe.

Mental Grounding:

Describe your environment in detail, using all of your senses – for example, "The walls are white, there are five blue chairs, there is a wooden bookshelf against the wall" Describe objects, sounds, textures, colours, smells, shapes, numbers, and temperature. You can do this anywhere.
Play a "categories" game with yourself. Try to think of types of dogs, jazz musicians, animals or famous people that begin with each letter of the alphabet, cars, TV shows, writers, sports, songs, cities.
Describe an everyday activity in great detail. For example, describe a meal that you cook (e.g., "First, I peel the potatoes and cut them into quarters; then I boil the water; then I make an herb marinade of basil, garlic, and olive oil").
Imagine. Use a pleasant or comforting mental image. Again, use all of your senses to make it as real and vid as possible.
Read something, saying each word to yourself. Or read each letter backwards so that you focus on the letters and not the meaning of words.
Use humour. Think of something funny to jolt yourself out of your mood.
Count to 10 or say the alphabet, very s   o w   y.

"Your body isn't the enemy—
it's trying to protect you.
Grounding is a way of gently showing it that you're safe now."

Physical Grounding:

Run cool or warm water over your hands.
Grab tightly onto your chair as hard as you can; notice the sensations and the experience.
Touch various objects around you: a pen, your clothing, the table, the walls. Notice textures, colours, weight, temperature. Compare the objects you touch.
Carry a grounding object in your pocket – a small object (a small rock, ring, piece of cloth) that you can touch whenever you feel unpleasant emotions rising.
Notice your body: the weight of your body in the chair; wiggling your toes in your socks; the feel of your back against the chair.
Stretch. Extend your fingers, arms, legs as far as you can; slowly and gently roll your head around.
Clench and release your firsts.
Jump up and down.
Eat something in a savouring way; fully experience the food; describe the sights, aromas, textures, flavors, and the experience in detail to yourself.
Focus on your breathing, noticing each inhale and exhale. Repeat a pleasant word to yourself on each exhale.

"Even in overwhelm, there is always something steady to return to — your breath, your body, this moment."

Soothing Grounding:

Say kind statements, as if you were talking to a friend or small child – for example, "You are a good person going through a hard time. You'll get through this."
Think of favourites. Think of your favourite colour, animal, season, food, time of day, TV show.
Picture people you care about and look at photographs of them.
Remember the words to an inspiring song, quotation, or poem that makes you feel better (e.g., serenity prayer).
Say a coping statement: "I can handle this," "This feeling will pass."
Plan a safe treat for yourself, such as a piece of candy, a nice dinner, or a warm bath.
Think of things you are looking forward to in the next week – perhaps time with a friend, going to a movie, or going on a hike.
Tips
Practice! Practice! Like any other skill, grounding takes practice. So practice as often as possible and before you actually need it. Then, when you need to call upon this skill you will have it, know it, and use it well.
Try to notice which methods you like best – physical, mental, or soothing grounding methods, or some combination.
Start grounding early on in a negative mood cycle. Start before the anger, anxiety, or other feeling gets out of control.

These tools are here to support you, but you don't have to figure it out on your own. Book a free call to see how therapy or coaching could help you feel more grounded, connected, and safe.

Create Personal Calm

Create your own method of grounding. Any method you not be worth much more than those you read here, because it is Make up an index card or type in your phone a list of your grounding methods. Have the list available so it is there whit.
Create an mp3 of a grounding message that you can play needed. Consider asking your counsellor or someone close trecord it if you want to hear someone else's voice.
Have others assist you in grounding. Teach family and fried grounding, so that they can help guide you with it if you becoverwhelmed.
Don't give up!
Now, list three of the strategies described above that you th best for you. Then practice these skills regularly, so in times will know what to do and how to do it successfully.	of need you best for you. Then practice these skills regularly, so in times	of need you best for you. Then practice these skills regularly, so in times will know what to do and how to do it successfully.  3 grounding strategies I am committed to learning, practicing,	of need you and best for you. Then practice these skills regularly, so in times will know what to do and how to do it successfully.  3 grounding strategies I am committed to learning, practicing, applying:  1.	of need you and best for you. Then practice these skills regularly, so in times will know what to do and how to do it successfully.  3 grounding strategies I am committed to learning, practicing, applying:  1	and

These tools are here to support you, but you don't have to figure it out on your own. Book a free call to see how therapy or coaching could help you feel more grounded, connected, and safe.

After practicing and/or applying these grounding strategies, what have you noticed? Do you feel more in control? Do your emotions change? Are you able to calm yourself and focus on something other than the unpleasant emotions and situations?

You've just taken a really important step — not by fixing or changing anything, but simply by being here with yourself. Grounding isn't about perfection or instant calm; it's about slowly building safety, trust, and connection in your body again. There may be moments where the practices feel easy, and others where they feel far away — both are okay.

This work takes time, and you're allowed to move at your own pace. Be gentle with yourself as you explore what helps you feel more present, soothed, and supported. And if you ever feel ready for deeper guidance, I'm here to walk alongside you. You don't have to do this alone.