New knights created

Bishop Paul Hendricks travelled to Chartres in France where he dubbed three new knights of the ancient Militia Sanctae Mariae.

The three new knights, from France, Brazil and the UK, were dubbed during Mass after they had spent a night of prayer in the crypt of Chartres Cathedral in accordance with chivalric tradition.

The organisation, often known as Chevaliers de Notre Dame, base their rule on that of St Benedict. Although originally French, they are now also represented in several countries including the British province which is slowly growing in numbers.
