

SOLAIR TURKEY WEAR BY FORLOH

Technical Hoodie and Pants | Review by Jim Gebhart

Spring turkey season necessitates preparation for all types of weather. Where we hunt, it may be sleeting or 80°F (27°C) degrees. At the very least, chilly mornings will turn into warm afternoons. The SolAir technical pants and hoodie from Forloh are go-to clothing to meet those challenges. When it's cold, the jacket and pants are roomy enough to allow layering without the bulkiness of many brands. When the temps are warmer, the material feels soft against your skin, and it doesn't feel clammy when you sweat. Constructed of 7oz brrr® Pro treated Polyester and Spandex, the pants and hoodie offer fast drying, hyper-wicking, and temperature regulation to keep you comfortable on the go. Turkey hunting often requires a quick jog to get set up in front of fast-moving turkeys. The wicking properties and comfortable feel of the SolAir pants and top are perfect for cooling down after a quick jog, and the deep cover camo pattern works well in the bright emerging vegetation of spring to keep you hidden once you get settled. Jacket sleeves have thumb slots extending the sleeves over the hands, exposing the fingers for easy gun handling while providing UPF 50+ sun protection for most of the hand.

Comfort and concealment are essential considerations in turkey hunting. So is the placement and usefulness of pockets. The jacket has two side pockets handy for light storage and hand-warming. There is also a zippered pocket on the upper left chest. The pants have two side pockets on each front hip and a zippered pocket on the back. The zipper on the back right hip is high enough on the hip that it does not restrict circulation when the hunter is sitting motionless for extended periods. Turkey hunters know the importance of that feature.
