Imran Savas

Imran Savas is a British entrepreneur, speaker and founder of Tape UK, recognised more than 25 times for his work in business, leadership and social impact including Entrepreneur of the Year in both 2024 and 2026.

But what sets him apart isn't the awards, it's the consistency between what he says and what he does: he's turned down major investment, walked away from deals that didn't align with his values, and spoken openly on racism, politics, faith and government action even when it's cost him.

He's built a career on one idea — that success isn't measured by what you accumulate, but by the lives you improve.

Recording: Available for television, radio, podcasts, documentaries, conferences and panel discussions.

Camera Preference: Where possible, I prefer to be positioned on the right-hand side of the frame so that a lapel pin representing a cause close to my heart is visible to the audience.

Privacy: I do not discuss my family, personal relationships, confidential client matters, staff, or private financial matters. If these topics arise inadvertently during recording, I would appreciate them being removed from the final edit.

"My goal is simple: to become my own hero and if I'm blessed with more time, to become him again. No one inspires me more than the person I'm still becoming. Be the good you want to see. That's the real success."

"The greatest investment you can make isn't in a business. It's in another human being."

The goal isn't to inspire people for an hour. It's to challenge the way they think for a lifetime.

"I never pursued fame or the stage. They came as a consequence of the work. If I'm given a platform, I believe it carries a responsibility to encourage meaningful conversations, challenge injustice where I see it and help give a voice to people who don't have one"
