

It's not merely the content of the phrases exchanged nor the nature of the activities in which we're engaged...it's also the give-and-take with clear cycles of approach and withdrawals, continuously maintaining each other's rhythm, that create meaningful relationships.

HENRY MAIER, PH.D.

the art of RELATIONAL CARE

ONLINE COURSE

TRAINING
GROUNDS

It's the experience of a relationship that's the most influential aspect of helping others grow and thrive.

Yet it's exactly the element that's so often neglected.

Whether it's facilitating a safe classroom culture, increasing engagement in counseling, or creating a nurturing home environment it all comes back to the nature of the relationship.

This course isn't for those who want to hold tightly to rigid or coercive strategies, but if you've been looking for something that equips you to build restorative connections with the kids and families you interact with, this is it.

This self-paced video course will guide you through what it takes to connect with and empower students and young people – and what you'll gain is relevant in any setting where individuals or teams want to create conditions for learning, growth, and restoration.
