TEEN-AGED TROOPS BLASTED

Yanks Foil Red Assault

SARCON (UPI) — Teen-aged North Vietnamese soldiers charging in a human wave defense perimeter of a U.S. artillery base in Cambodia today in the first Communist counterattack of the Allied Cambodian offensive. They were thrown back with heavy losses.

Some of the South Vietnamese soldiers started home today with 9,000 Vietnamese refugees loaded aboard a flotilla of boats which sailed 100 miles up the Mekong River to Phnom Penh and beyond to rescue them from the threat of Cambodian persecution.

Quarters near Tan Son Nhut Airport, wounding one American and several Vietnamese who lined next door to the women and two children.

Later in the city's Cholon section, terrorists opened fire from the threat of Cambodian persecution.

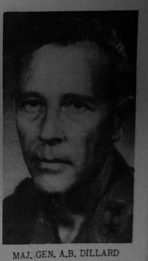

Military spokesmen said the American defenders of the Cambodian garrison two miles north of Saigon leveled their guns and blasted apart the charging Communists, killing 58 of them. American losses were put at one dead and eight wounded.

The withdrawal report followed two earlier attacks in the capital early today. In one, a second bomb exploded near the Louisiana U.S. Officers' supply network.

Military sources said South Vietnamese gumbats that made the deepest penetration into Cambodia, 110 miles up the Mekong River to Kompong Cham, were taking about an estimated 3,500 Vietnamese refugees for the trip back home to Vietnam.

Other vessels from the same armada took on hundreds more Vietnamese at Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, for an evacuation at Vietnam which military officials expected would take several days.

An estimated 100,000 Vietnamese in Cambodia want to return home, PAVL reports have claimed about 5,500 Viet Cong and North Vietnamese killed with Allied losses put at about 225 South Vietnamese dead and 90 American allies.

Romney Is Firm About Brainwash

Governor To Stay In Race

INQUIRY DEMANDED

Ford Lambastes 'McNamara Wall'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford's surprise move to stay in the 1976 presidential race today drew a sharp rebuke from Sen. Henry Ford, who lambasted the move as a "brainwash" and demanded an inquiry into the matter.

Sen. Ford, who is a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, said the move was a "brainwash" and demanded an inquiry into the matter.

PAUL REVERE AND THE RAIDERS

LEGEND OF ME-WHAT'S IT GONNA BE?

PAUL REVERE AND THE RAIDERS

Of all the acts that sprang up out of the Pacific Northwest during rock and roll's early years, Paul Revere and the Raiders were the bunch, possessing the ability to excite an audience and make them cry out for more.

A number of "lucky breaks," as Revere called them, led to more than a decade of strong record sales, big radio hits, persistent touring and the most prominent television presence of just about any music act of the 1960s.

This success hinged on two distinct personalities: Harvard, Nebraska-born Paul Revere Dick spent most of his early life in Caldwell, Idaho, about 30 miles east of Boise, while the four-years-younger Mark Lindsay, born in Eugene, Oregon in 1942, moved to the same area and began singing at age 15 with a local band, Freddy Chapman and the Idaho Playboys.

A chance meeting yielded many years of rollicking good times.

Revere had worked as a barber at age 18 and by 1958 he owned a small walk-up/drive-thru burger restaurant in Caldwell called Red & Bell Root Beer, which he kept running even after his music career had kicked in.

Lindsay had a job as a baker but walked out after meeting and singing for Paul one night at the Elks Lodge in Caldwell.

Both were fans of Jerry Lee Lewis, the pumpin' piano man doing "Whole Lotta Shakin'" and "Great Balls" business on the charts at the time.

Paul and Mark joined forces in a band called The Downbeats, performing mostly instrumentals and gaining a word-of-mouth reputation in Southern Idaho and parts of Washington and Oregon.

In 1960, after recording some songs in a local studio and shopping the tapes around, they got a bite from John Guss, the owner of a small L.A.-based label, Gardens Records, who suggested taking advantage of Revere's given name, which the two had previously considered.

They thought Night Riders sounded good but settled on the Raiders (same as Tommy Sands' recently-defunct backing band) and promoted themselves as "the wildest sound for miles around."
