What are NFTs?

NFTs, short for 'non-fungible tokens', are cryptographic tokens existing on a blockchain that cannot be replicated or reproduced. They can be used to represent the rights to own, use, and exchange digital collectibles, in-game assets, and more.

Trending NFT Tokens

Gala Games is a blockchain video game company created by Zynga Co-founder Eric Schiermeyer. The Gala Games ecosystem currently has over 1.3 million monthly active users, and the most expensive NFT on its network sold for a whopping US$3 million. GALA is the company's native token, being distributed as a reward and used as a medium of exchange. Players can use it to buy NFTs for games that are built on the Gala Network.

The Sandbox (SAND) is an alternative metaverse to Decentraland.

Although it's only in its Alpha phase, it has racked up over 200,000 users and distributed 5 million of its native SAND token. This metaverse has some serious backing behind it, with SoftBank, LG, and Samsung among its investors. What's more, its partners include Adidas, Snoop Dogg, and Avenged Sevenfold.

As the meme goes, "Ape Together Strong". The APE ecosystem encompasses all products, services, and ApeCoin (APE) holders. These include BAYC and MAYC NFT holders, and Yuga Labs. APE holders can participate in the ApeCoin DAO and guide the ecosystem along. Additionally, holders gain access to exclusive games, merchandise, events, and services.
