

MEASURING GUIDE

NOTE: It is better if a second person takes the measurements.

MENS KILTS

MENS KILTS

(MEASUREMENTS IN INCHES)

In stock kilts have a standard seat size and length, so only the waist needs to be measured to determine the size required. Made to measure kilts require three different measurements: waist, seat and length. Mens kilts traditionally hang about mid knee, or top of the knee if it is a military style kilt.

- A WAIST: Measure snugly around your waist at the height of your belly button.
- B SEAT: Put your feet together and measure around the broadest part of the hips and bum.
- C LENGTH: Kneel down, keeping your back straight, and measure from the belly button to the floor. UNLESS you are looking for a military style kilt, then (kneeling the same way) you measure from the belly button to the top of the knee. It is especially important to have second person to measure this because if you attempt to measure yourself, it is likely you will lean forward and accidentally alter the measurement.

(Measurements in inches)

In stock kilts have a standard seat size and length, so only the waist needs to be measured to determine the size required. Made to measure kilts require three different measurements: waist, seat and length. Mens kilts traditionally hang about mid knee, or top of the knee if it is a military style kilt.

Waist: Measure snugly around your waist at the height of your belly button.

Seat: Put your feet together and measure around the broadest part of the hips and bum.

Length: Kneel down, keeping your back straight, and measure from the belly button to the floor.

UNLESS you are looking for a military style kilt, then (kneeling the same way) you measure from the belly button to the top of the knee. It is especially important to have second person to measure this because if you attempt to measure yourself, it is likely you will lean forward and accidentally alter the measurement.