Rye is standing during an interview in the Your Bank office hallway. Office sounds are heard in the background.

B-ROLL shot of Rye holding the rubber duck at his office cubicle. B-ROLL shot of Rye waving it back and forth in the hallway window. The office lights are set to after hours.

> RYE
>
> Did you know that banks rely on a rubber duck to signal that it's safe to enter the building? Yes, a rubber duck.

Rye holds up a yellow rubber duck and looks at the camera.

>
> It's absolutely insane if you ask me.

INT. DAYTIME - YOUR BANK OFFICE CUBICLE - SCENE 1

Rye is sitting at his cubicle in the Your Bank office. Office sounds are heard in the background.

The manager is heard speaking to the entire office in the background off camera. Rye is holding a rubber duck that Your Bank provided for all of their employees. Rye is holding up a memo on a piece of paper from Your Bank and is reading it.

> Hello team! As of this morning, Your Bank sent out a memo stating that we will begin using rubber ducks as a security safety measure.

Rye holds up his hand while looking confused.

> Do you have a question, Rye?

>
> No, I have to go to the bathroom, Mike. Why are we using rubber ducks as a security safety measure? In all honesty, you lost me at Your Bank sent out a memo. When do they ever do that?

                    MANAGER
          Great question, Rye. This bank security protocol has been around for a while. Banks use a rubber duck to signal when it's safe to enter the building.

                    RYE
          But someone has to already go into the building to check to see if it's safe for us to enter and then place the rubber duck in the window?

                    MANAGER
          Yes, that is correct.

                    RYE
          But what happens to the employee who goes in and a robber just so happens to be inside? What if the robber then puts the rubber duck in the window to lure us inside?

                    MANAGER
          Look, Rye... I'm just relaying the information that was provided to me from corporate. I guess Your Bank decided to start using it again.

INT. DAYTIME - YOUR BANK OFFICE HALLWAY - INTERVIEW 2

Rye is standing during an interview in the Your Bank office hallway. Office sounds are heard in the background.

B-ROLL shot of Rye holding the rubber duck at his office cubicle. Rye is holding his rubber duck and is waving it around throughout the interview.

                    RYE
          Yeah listen, I'm not letting some cheap little rubber duck be the security gaurd on duty. Can't we just invest in some security cameras that work or even better... an actual security guard? Crazy idea, right?

INT. DAYTIME - YOUR BANK OFFICE CUBICLE - SCENE 2

Rye is sitting at his cubicle in the Your Bank office. Office sounds are heard in the background.

Rye is holding his rubber duck and is waving it around throughout the scene.

> RYE
> Okay, hear me out. What if, instead of putting a rubber duck in the window. We all walk in together and if a robber is inside, we all just chunk this little rubber duck at a robber? I think that would be more effective, to be honest.

INT. DAYTIME - YOUR BANK OFFICE HALLWAY - INTERVIEW 3

Rye is standing during an interview in the Your Bank office hallway. Office sounds are heard in the background.

> RYE
> I'll tell you what. Some companies will do whatever it takes to save money nowadays.

Rye holds up his rubber duck and looks at it. Rye sighs.

> RYE
> Well little buddy. My life is in your hands now... Even though you don't have any hands... There has to be another way we can get better security around this place. I mean come on.
