Well, here we are in the holiday season with lots of guests, food and visitors who don't understand septic systems. Now I'm not suggesting you discuss this topic around the thanksgiving or Christmas tables but I want you to think about it a little before they get here. So below is a list of suggestions for the festive occasions.

- 1 With lots of people in the house short showers are a must
- 2 Scrape the turkey and dressing off the plates into the garbage pail, not the disposal, one of the worst things you can do is put grease into to your system
- 3 Tell your guests what not to flush down the commode like coffee grounds, cigarette butts, dental floss, disposable diapers, ear plugs, sanitary napkins (You say everybody knows that well I once found a beer can in sewer line of a condo I bought}
- 4 Be very alert to unnecessary water usage going down the drain like faucet running constantly when doing the dishes, brushing your teeth, etc, if you haven't had your systems pumped in a while might be a good time to stay ahead of a crisis when guests are here and have it pre-pumped. That's like going to bathroom before you leave on a long car trip makes sense right.

OK that's enough of my lecture I'm just saying let's not make this year the best Christmas the septic pumpers ever had.
