501c3 non-profit charitable organizations devoted to serving individuals and families affected by dementia.

Dear Caregiver,

Over the last 17 years, we have met with several hundred people in Brazoria County who have just been told that their loved ones had some form of dementia.

All of them were very emotional. Most did not know where to turn. Many didn't know enough about dementia to know where to start.

If you have just been told that a loved one has Alzheimer's or a related dementia, and you are going to be the primary caregiver, we hope this booklet makes it a little easier for you. It is a starting place for your journey. The Gathering Place provides programs that will be with you every step of the way.

Our Brain Camp, Meta Camp, CompU.Talk (Zoom school), Campfire, Culture Camp, and the Alzheimer's Awareness Project offer education about prevention, diagnosis, and treatment at classes, conferences, memory screenings, community presentations, and special events.

You may drop off your family member at nine 4-hour Gathering Place socials each month where trained and compassionate volunteers see that they have a wonderful time! Take that opportunity for recreation or rest.

If your family member is in the earliest stage of a memory disorder, he may qualify for our Early Stage coaching program where we work intensively 1:1 to create new neural pathways to slow the progression of the disease. Of course, all our services are free.

The News

The doctor has just said that your mom or dad has vascular dementia or that your spouse has Alzheimer's disease. Family members had noticed for some time that your loved one had some problems remembering and that she had begun to repeat stories.

There had been some unexplained personality changes also. You had hoped so much that the cause had been a vitamin deficiency or a thyroid problem. But it wasn't. The doctor has ruled out everything else. Your heart may be racing, or you may feel numb and cold as fear and apprehension settle over you. Later, you won't recall how you responded, or how you felt as your emotions overwhelmed you. You have entered a new world: you are now a caregiver.

But you are NOT alone. There are resources in Brazoria County to help you and that's what we will talk about in this guide.

If you live long enough, chances are you will become a caregiver or one who is being cared for. At age 85, there is almost a 50-50 chance that you will have Alzheimer's disease.

Women are hardest hit by Alzheimer's disease: they are more apt to be caregivers and since they live longer, they are more likely to eventually get the disease.

Types of Dementia

Dementia is an umbrella term describing the deterioration of mental functions that affect memory, thinking, mood, judgment, and ability to concentrate. The earliest signs usually include confusion, memory problems, and changes in behavior. Other early symptoms may be a change in gait or a loss of smell.

There are more than 100 different types of dementia and in the past eight years, some researchers have identified subtypes. Alzheimer's disease accounts for about 60% and about 20% of persons with dementia have the vascular type.

Frontotemporal dementias are a group of diseases most doctors hadn't heard of 20 years ago. At that time doctors indicated a person had "dementia of an unspecified type." It is common to have "mixed dementia," which means that the person has more than one type.

Many dementias are reversible. When they are a result of high fever, medications, anesthesia, vitamin deficiencies, or infections, they may frequently be reversed. It's not uncommon for the elderly to have chronic low-grade urinary infections with no symptoms other than dementia. Treatment includes antibiotics, which should provide total reversal of symptoms.

One type of dementia, normal pressure hydrocephalus, is caused by a buildup of fluid in the brain and can sometimes be corrected by surgical installation of a shunt in the brain.

Early and accurate diagnosis is vital and determines the type of treatment your loved one can receive.

Because a correct diagnosis is critical, your family physician may refer you to a neurologist for further testing and treatment.

Take a Deep Breath

Men and women approach caregiving differently, so their challenges will be different. Men generally want to "fix" their family member with dementia, and the frustration they feel before they realize that they just can't "fix" this problem can be particularly devastating to them.

Women who have been accustomed to deferring to parents and spouses will face difficult challenges as they struggle to assume control of their circumstances.

Children who are caring for an aging parent may still have their own children at home and many are still working.

Retirees who had looked forward to traveling and enjoying their golden years frequently find themselves spending those years caring for a parent with dementia. Many report that the opportunity to give care to an aging parent proved to be a meaningful experience for them.

Less frequently, an elderly parent cares for a child with dementia who may need to move back home. In Brazoria County, we have worked with three Alzheimer's patients in the past 15 years who were younger than age 50.

Before you start to look for resources and information, take a deep breath. You probably do not realize it, but you have started grieving. You have already begun to feel the loss in your life of the role your family member had played.

Perhaps your mom had also been your best friend, or your dad had always been there to help with his grandkids or fix a broken appliance. Your husband or wife had been the love of your life; that has been changing, and now you are beginning to realize that things will never be the way they were.

You are hurting, and you may become depressed. Give yourself a little time to come to terms with your new life before you make any plans. During this time, do not quit your job, put your house up for sale, or make decisions about living arrangements (except in an emergency) for your family member.

Go to Your Doctor

There is a reason that you are instructed on airplanes to grab the oxygen mask first before you place it on your child. You must be able to care for yourself if you are responsible for the care of a loved one who has dementia.

This concept may be more difficult for female caregivers because many have been encouraged to put their families' needs before their own, but many husbands also feel guilty if they acknowledge that they, too, have needs that must be met during caregiving.

It's very simple: you MUST make a plan for your own care while you are developing a plan for your loved one. If you don't, at some point in the future, you may be physically exhausted and emotionally spent.

Worst of all, you may have forgotten the wonderful things about the relationship you once had with the person you are caring for. If you take care of yourself—the lunch with friends, the regular golf game, the massage, the mani-pedi, the occasional getaway—you will be able to retain and cherish your memories, and indeed, you will be able to cherish the time you still have.

Get a thorough physical checkup. You may need to start a vitamin regimen or an exercise routine to minimize stress. Start taking a walk every day. Learn to meditate and live in the moment. Many caregivers say that taking up Yoga or Tai Chi has helped them deal with stress and avoid depression. If there is a hobby you have always wanted to take up, now is the time to do it. Identify the sources of spiritual and emotional replenishment that you will call on during the time you will be giving care.

Assess your social situation. If you are taking care of a spouse, you may have noticed that your friends have started moving on. Good friends, of course, will be there for you. But casual acquaintances frequently disappear, or you, the caregiver, may be reluctant to accept or offer invitations. Do not become isolated— continue spending time with your friends; do not give up your volunteerism or the groups you belong to. People who have large support systems are better able to handle the responsibilities of caregiving.

Include Your Loved One in Her Plan of Care

In planning for your loved one's care, be sure to include her in decisions if she is capable of participating. Your family member may need to talk with you about her feelings and what she wants. Even with an Alzheimer's diagnosis, a family member may be able to convey her wishes.

Address Financial Issues

If you are the caregiver of a parent, you will need a Medical Power of Attorney, and you or someone that you can work with needs a Durable Power of Attorney for finances. If you are a spouse and your partner has children from a previous marriage, you may also need those documents. No matter how small the estate, see your attorney as soon as possible after the diagnosis to make sure that Powers of Attorney, wills, and advance directives are up-to-date and in order.

Taking Away the Car Keys

One of the toughest decisions a caregiver must make is when to stop her family member from driving. Sixty percent of Alzheimer's patients will wander. Many times, a person with a diagnosis of Alzheimer's will simply hand the keys over and stop driving. But most caregivers must become creative. If you are the caregiver of a parent, you may need to disable the car. You could have the family doctor tell your family member that she cannot drive because of a health condition. If you are caring for your spouse, start slipping into the driver's seat.

Addressing this issue may be one of the most difficult situations that you will face as a caregiver. The loss of independence can be terrifying for the person who has Alzheimer's, and the caregiver can be just as frightened of angering her loved one. When your family member is still able to live alone, it also means that you are now responsible for his transportation, picking up groceries and medications, and seeing to it that he is still engaged with his world socially.

Reach Out for Respite and Support

Talk with your siblings or children about helping with your family member. If you are caring for a parent, the tone you set with other family members in the early days after diagnosis will have far-reaching implications. It is not unreasonable to expect your siblings to help with a parent who has dementia. Ideally, you may be able to involve your siblings early and plan a course of care together.

In many instances, however, one child becomes the sole caregiver and may become resentful after years of care if siblings offer nothing more than advice. It isn't uncommon for siblings who live out of town to feel like they are contributing by offering criticism.

To avoid that, make your expectations known. If siblings live out of town, perhaps they can plan to take several long weekends a year to stay with your parent while you take a break.

Asking children to help may be harder; most children who live nearby, however, find some way to assist. When they offer, tell them absolutely that you appreciate the offer and then allow them to help regularly.

Your family member may be able to manage being alone for several years but make your plan now for the time that she cannot stay by herself.

Many exceptional companies in Brazoria County offer companion care for a fee. If your family member is not on Medicaid, Texas Health and Human Services offers limited free respite, called Community Attendant Services (713-692-1635). Gathering Place Interfaith Ministries (979-308-4525) offer 38 hours of free respite each month at congregations in Angleton, Lake Jackson, Clute, and Alvin.

Medicaid may provide a respite option for those who qualify (call 211). Monthly Alzheimer's Caregiver Support Groups are available at the Gathering Place office, 200 E. Mulberry in Angleton, and at First Christian Church, 1212 S. Durant in Alvin. Plan to attend a Support Group—you can learn so much from other caregivers. Many caregivers who have attended Support Groups over the last 15 years have become good friends.

Communicating with Your Family Member

Brazoria County libraries carry many excellent books on communication with a person with a memory disorder. Read one or two as soon as possible. Some of the most user-friendly books on Alzheimer’s disease are The 36-Hour Day, Learning to Speak Alzheimer’s, Alzheimer’s for Dummies, and Grain Brain.

One of the most important things you will learn is that trying to reason with your family member may become impossible at some point, sometimes very early in the disease process.

Correcting, reminding, and scolding your family member for not remembering something is frequently very hurtful to her. Reminding your mom that her husband has been dead for 10 years may break her heart each time she hears it. It will also make your job as a caregiver much harder because of the confusion and agitation it will cause her.

Reality Check – the reality for your loved one is different from yours. You cannot change that. Learn to go into “her world” where you will never need to say “no.”

When Your Parent Is Living Alone

When your parent has been diagnosed with dementia and she is living alone, you will need to begin an assessment of her living conditions when you visit. Is the food in the refrigerator spoiled? Is the home as clean as she has always kept it? Is the oven on? Is she safe?

The person with dementia deserves to keep her independence as long as possible, but at some point, she may need some companion care with house cleaning, cooking, maintenance, or assistance with bathing and dressing.

Assisted Living May Be the Answer

If you are a child caring for a single parent who is no longer able to live alone, investigate assisted living as an option. Assisted living offers socialization with peers, appropriate activities, and outings in an environment that is safe. There are a variety of attractive, excellent assisted living facilities in Brazoria County. They vary widely in amenities, activities, and cognitive abilities of their residents.

If you decide to move your family member into your home, remember that socializing with her peers will always be important to her mental, emotional, and physical health. Just as your family member cannot meet all your needs, you cannot meet all of hers.

Generally, if your family member has the means, they are happier in their “own place” in an assisted living facility with age mates and friends than they are living with a family member.

The family must visit often and pick up their loved ones for Sunday dinners and family occasions.

Promised Mom That Dad Could Stay at Home?

Before my mom passed away, I promised her that Dad would be able to stay in the home they’d shared for 40 years. He was disabled, had vascular dementia and early-stage Alzheimer’s, and required around-the-clock care.

With 10 daughters and grandkids, someone visited with Dad every day for two years and his nurses were companionable. Nevertheless, he declined and had to be admitted against his will to a rehabilitation hospital. After three weeks of rehab, his geriatrician ordered therapies in a skilled unit at a nearby nursing facility.

There, his roommate was also wheelchair-bound and a World War II veteran. They shared their stories and became fast friends. At lunch, Dad was placed with three ladies his age who vied for his attention. He flourished in that environment and gained back all the weight he had lost at home. The last six months of his life were very happy ones.

Keeping Your Family Member Connected

I learned from that experience that keeping your loved one connected to the outside world is critical. Interaction with his peers becomes even more important as the disease progresses. Memories from the distant past are usually intact and your loved one is eager to share his stories.

Early in the process, he may benefit from participation in the Actions congregate meals program or a senior ministry at your church.

As soon as possible, enroll them in Gathering Place socials where they will participate in activities that include music, dance, arts and crafts, reminiscing, exercise, games, and Bingo. Experienced volunteers are trained to make your loved one feel good about who they are right now. They usually return home more confident, happier, and much easier to care for.

Wandering

Keeping your family member safe is one of your most important jobs. Up to 60% of people with dementia tend to wander away from their caregivers or home, and then are unable to find their way back.

If your family member is ambulatory, get a letter from your doctor stating that she is being treated for Alzheimer's disease or related dementia. To be on the safe side, call the Brazoria County Sheriff's Office (979-864-2392) and obtain the paperwork for a Silver Alert in case you need it.

Your town may also have a voluntary registry so that local police can quickly find your family member if they get lost. To activate the Silver Alert, you must provide a doctor's letter with your family member's diagnosis. Caregivers can also take photos with their telephone regularly so that a recent photograph can be provided immediately to the Sheriff's office.

Hearing Problem?

One out of every three people 65 to 74 and almost half of people over age 75 have some hearing loss. It has been described as a silent epidemic. Loss of hearing can be devastating to your family member with a memory disorder. Over time, the brain will lose the ability to process information and cognitive abilities will decline rapidly. Look into assistive devices recommended by an audiologist.

One of Your Best Allies: The Internet

If you are not computer savvy, consider taking classes at the Brazoria County Center for Independent Living in Angleton or at Brazosport College or Alvin Community College. You will be able to access up-to-the-minute information about Alzheimer's disease, caregiving issues, and online support organizations. You can compare Texas Health and Human Services ratings of nursing homes and access resources that are not available any other way. There's no need to purchase a computer if you don't want to; your local library has computers that you may use for free.

Slowing Cognitive Decline

As people age, many choose to start limiting their exposure to novelty and challenge, preferring the comfortable and familiar. Nothing could be worse for people who have Alzheimer's disease. Keep your family member engaged in social activities, exercise 45 minutes each day (3 15-minute segments work), enjoy a Mediterranean or low-carb diet, watch PBS documentaries, and listen to music. Encourage her to read biographies and discuss the books. Play word games. Have family members pitch in with those activities—they build new neural pathways in the brain and the companionship will decrease stress hormones and increase oxytocin. Discuss the merits of a monthly B-12 shot and supplements with your family member’s doctor.

Coping as a Caregiver

You will probably have many different feelings as you care for a loved one with Alzheimer’s disease or related dementia. There are times that you will be very happy to be providing love and comfort. In fact, you may feel that way most of the time.

At other times, you may be physically exhausted or overwhelmed. You may be frightened by the changes you see in your family member and unsure of your ability to continue providing care. You may be faced with problem behaviors, or tired from dealing with the same problems daily. It is critical that you take care of yourself while you are caregiving.

Take short breaks every day. Go for a daily walk and pay attention to the beauties of nature. Read a chapter from a book. Make a list of the small things that you can do every day for yourself.

Accept help. A friend or relative may be glad to take your family member for a walk several times a week or work a puzzle with her while you go to the beauty or barber shop. When people offer help, they usually mean it, but they may not know what to do unless you tell them.

Get informed. Take classes or attend seminars and support groups on caregiving. Information will empower you.

Stay connected. Try to stay in touch with family and friends. Make plans to get out of the house and set aside time for socializing.

Maintain healthy habits. Eat a healthy diet and get a good night's rest. See your doctor and be sure to tell your doctor that you are a caregiver.

Exercise. Structure an exercise program for yourself. In Angleton, join UTMB Angleton Danbury's Wellness Center or the Angleton Recreation Center for classes. The Lake Jackson area has several private exercise facilities as well as the Lake Jackson Recreation Center. Tai Chi and yoga are often recommended as stress busters. Alvin has excellent exercise opportunities at the Senior Center and four private facilities. Pearland has a wide variety of options. A joyful life-affirming session in a Zumba class burns calories and makes you glad to be alive.

Practice mindfulness. Learn to live in the moment. That's a matter of practice. Stop worrying about what you are going to say or do next, or tomorrow. Stop trying to multitask.

Signs of Caregiver Stress

As a caregiver, you may be so concerned with taking good care of your loved one that you don't notice that your own health may be suffering. The Mayo Clinic warns that signs of caregiver stress include:

- Losing interest in activities you once enjoyed
- Feeling tired most of the time
- Feeling irritable
- Feeling overwhelmed
- Gaining or losing weight
- Sleeping too much or too little

- Wound care for pressure sores or a surgical wound
- Patient and caregiver education
- Intravenous or nutrition therapy
- Injections

Hospice

Hospice provides care for a person who is near the end of life in the home or a nursing facility and keeps the person who is dying as pain-free as possible. Medicare or Medicaid may cover costs. Many caregivers wait until the last few weeks or days to call hospice in to help.

Your family members would benefit from the loving, caring relationships they form with hospice providers and so will you. Call them as early as possible.

This is not a complete list of hospices in Brazoria County—there are 41 certified to serve zip code 77581, just one zip code in Pearland! A complete list may be found on the Texas Health and Human Services website. ## Brazoria County Alzheimer's Awareness Project

The Brazoria County Alzheimer's Awareness Project is an educational outreach of the Gathering Place Interfaith Ministries. The group sponsors county-wide memory screenings each November at area libraries and retirement communities, partnering with the Alzheimer's Foundation. For the past 12 years, they have held one of the largest community-based memory screening initiatives in the United States right here in Brazoria County!

Working with the Alzheimer's Association, BCAAP offers two annual Caregiver Conferences where healthcare professionals provide information that caregivers can use.

BCAAP also works with the Sheriff's Office to provide regular training to Brazoria County First Responders and sponsors educational programs for special populations throughout the year.

For more information about the Alzheimer's Awareness Project, contact Dale Libby at dale.libby1954@gmail.com or call 979-236-5393.

Printing of this publication was funded entirely by a grant from the Brazosport Rotary Foundation.
