

Celebrities who have their second homeland in the Dominican Republic

Posted by admin on 18 June, 2021

The Dominican Republic has had millionaire investments and has been promoted as the Caribbean paradise, and that is why many people have found in it a place where they can have a well-being, a second homeland. Next, we review the six celebrities who have forged a roots in Dominican soil:

Julio Iglesias

The Spanish singer, together with the Dominican designer Oscar de la Renta, sold the wonders of the Dominican Republic to the world. Together with De la Renta, Frank Rainieri and Theodore W. Kheel, he founded the Punta Cana Group. He also has properties and investments in different tourism sectors. “I love Dominicans, I love them for free, and I could have lived in any country in the world, but I chose this one for all the love they have always given,” the artist confessed to the Dominican press in 2014. When the country went through the process of changing identity cards, Julio Iglesias showed up to carry out the process, like any other Dominican.

Ricardo Montaner

“Dominican Republic I am officially yours,” said the singer when he received the identity document that made him official as a Dominican. The interpreter has a residence in “El Limón”, in the northeast of the island, where he spends most of his time. In addition, he is working on the construction of a school and a boutique hotel.

Vin Diesel

“Toretto” loves the Dominicans. He frequently visits the Los Mina sector, in the Santo Domingo Este municipality, Santo Domingo province, where he has several friends. In fact, he was very recently meeting with the President of the Republic, Luis Abinader, and according to publications on social networks, the North American actor would be interested in making considerable investments in the Dominican tourism industry. Vin Diesel has Dominican blood: his biological father, whom he did not know, was a Dominican biologist, perhaps that is why he feels like one of them.

Danny Rivera

In 2008, the Puerto Rican Danny Rivera officially became a Dominican, but long before the Puerto Rican artist already had the essence of the nation. Since his first visit to the country, he became involved in various causes and organizations that work in favor of the environment, culture and Dominican children.

Marc Anthony

The Dominicans love him and he has reciprocated this affection, leaving on Creole soil the construction of a building that houses the male section of the Fundación Niños de Cristo orphanage in the eastern region.

Source: <https://www.diariolibre.com/usa/evergreen/celebridades-que-tienen-en-republica-dominicana-a-su-segunda-patria-IM24289551>