POVA-WHAT?

A PROUD HERITAGE

Strawberry Hill Baking Co. celebrates a proud Eastern European heritage in the heart of the Midwest. The roots of this heritage lie in the traditional povitica (po-va-teet-sa) baked by Croatian and Slovenian grandmothers for generations. Much more than a pastry, this special treat was made to share with family and friends as the ultimate sign of love and respect. Preserving a secret family recipe more than a century old, Strawberry Hill Baking Co. brings the Old World povitica to a new generation, along with other delicious recipes inspired by the same spirit of heartfelt sharing. All of our pastries and cakes are handmade with the greatest of care, so whether you're treating yourself and your family or putting a smile on the face of a friend or colleague, generations of love can be tasted in every bite.

Povi-What?

Grandma pronounced it "po-va-TEET-sa." Others know this Eastern European pastry as potica, kolachi, gubana or bejgli. But you don't have to learn Croatian to enjoy this delicious tradition — just call it "povi" for short!

"The Backstory"

The story of Strawberry Hill Baking Company began in 1903 when our family came to Kansas City from Croatia, bringing along the beloved tradition of povitica. Grandma Dorothy and Grandma Daisy were reluctant to reveal the secret family recipe, but Dorothy's son Harley finally convinced them that this unique and delicious tradition should be shared with the world.

"The Supporting Cast"

While its rich texture resembles a cake, povi is actually a pastry, and our handmade dough plays the important role of supporting cast. The dough must be delicate, flaky, and thin enough to read a newspaper through it, while also holding together the abundance of filling that it's designed to showcase.

"The Star of The Show"

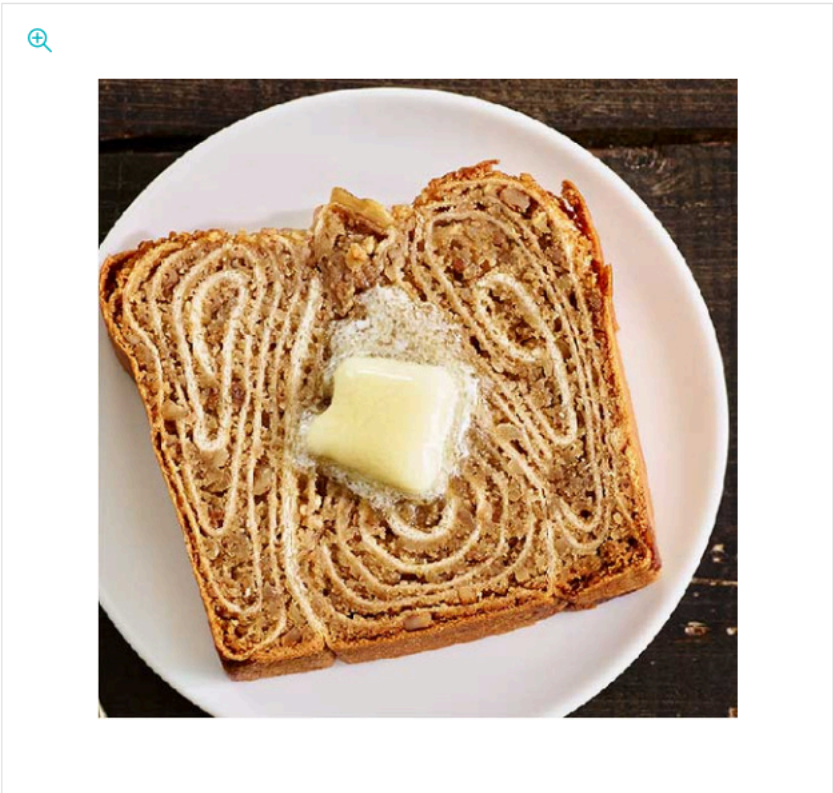

One thing that makes povi unique is that the handmade filling is the star of the show — each povi has three times more filling than dough. The dough is rolled around the filling by hand, formed into our signature "S" shape and then baked to perfection.

"Coffeecake, The Sequel"

Now three generations later, our family ships our handmade povi nationwide, and we've added another one of grandma's recipes to our repertoire — Old World coffee cake! Enjoy our povi or coffee cake with a pat of butter for breakfast, a scoop of ice cream for dessert, or straight off the cutting board for an afternoon snack.

English Walnut Povitica

The secret recipe for English walnut povitica was Grandma's first gift to us, and the original remains our bestseller to this day. We crush farm-fresh English walnuts and fold in sweet creamery butter, honey and real sugar. Then we roll it by hand in just enough of our delicate pastry dough to bring the filling together into buttery, flaky goodness, just as we've done for three generations.
