Within Reach.

Georgetown Reach is a free, four-year program offered at, and funded by, Georgetown University's McDonough School of Business. The program accepts rising eighth grade students, and students remain in the program through the college application process.

The primary goal of Georgetown Reach is to provide college consulting services to students who would not ordinarily be aware of the benefits of such services so that, as high school seniors, they are prepared to apply to top tier universities as viable applicants. Through a series of online webinars and in-person experiences, the program engages students and their parents or caregivers on how to successfully prepare for and be accepted by top colleges and universities to study any field of interest. Attending a top school like Georgetown University is not out of reach.
