

Inside the WCS

sort of like ESPN the Magazine, but way shittier.

By J. Mariotti
ITWCS Columnist
Jan. 24, 2016

ROI on TKE

The WCS is now in the third year of the "TKE Experiment," and by official accounts, it's been a step in the right direction.

"We feel strongly about being inclusive," said a member of the Anonymous Steering Committee, "and having TKEs among us is progress, the same way there's been progress with 'gays in the military,' 'Rod playing golf' or the 'Special Olympics.'"

It's all very positive for this specific little group.

"Last year we even handed a trophy to the best TKE, which we think sends a strong message that we apologize for all the chicks we pulled at their basement parties...it was really very cute when the big one got excited about winning..."

But not all members of the WCS share the same feeling about the TKE Experiment. "I need to see the value, what are we doing next, inviting homeless guys?"

With debate raging, the ASC has commissioned a 3 year "TKE Return on Investment Study" to be performed by an independent panel. The study will place a value on all aspects of the TKE Experiment, including their wins/losses, their comedic contributions beyond body types, how right wing their views become, as well as answering specific questions:

How angry can the "little TKE" get and still have it be funny?

Can the "big TKE" pass the IL 6th grade physical fitness test?

"We really hope that the TKEs remain" said the ASC spokesman. "Gays fight, women vote, these TKEs have already overcome long odds...let them play."

We'll have to see.

