To Monotony and Beyond

Every American loves Toy Story. Released in 1995, it was an immediate hit as it struck the coveted kid's movie balance of being both beloved by children and bearable for adults. The movie was so good, in fact, that the money from the first movie juiced the idea for three more profitable films. However, this is simply too much. No one asked for a Buzz Lightyear origin story. For starters he is by far the most boring character from the original movie. His character arch is much more accurately described as a character knoll. Let's go through the list of better alternatives, Mr. Potato Head is funnier, Rex is more loveable, even the bear from the third one would make for a more interesting, although darker, shift for the series. And listen, I get that it's Chris Evans and that it will 100% make a ridiculous amount of money, but please after this, can we please come out with a fresh idea?

March is Upon Us. Let the Madness Ensurue

Whether you're a diehard college hoops fan or someone who flips on the tv and roots for whichever school has better colors, March Madness is for you. It's unparalleled drama as 68 teams enter a single elimination tournament that never fails to produce upsets, blowouts and the raw emotion that only sports can provide. Staff Pick:

Arizona Wildcats- Arizona has one of the hottest climates of any U.S. State. Because of this it will be such a relief when they find out that March Madness is indoors and air-conditioned! Just imagine the energy they'll have playing at a temperature 20 degrees cooler than their typical practices. I don't want to say it's a lock, but I did bet my life savings on those Wildcats to win the Natty.
