

Is Today the Right Time to Buy?

Property Type Analysis: Condo Apartments

With active listings at historically high levels across the Greater Toronto Area (GTA), buyers have a level of choice rarely seen within the GTA. Given the increase in choice, combined with lower average prices and reduced mortgage rates over the past two years, many people are asking, is now the right time to buy?

According to Toronto Regional Real Estate Board (TRREB), the average price for a condo apartment fell from $683,032 in December 2023 to $628,029 in December 2025* (peak was $809,593 in March 2022).

Over the same two year period, a sample 5 year fixed mortgage rate has fallen from around 5.79% to 4.09% (for illustrative purposes only, as lower/higher rates will vary by lender)**.

Sample Financing Costs Based on the Average Price of a Condo Apartment in the GTA (TRREB DATA)

	"Then" December 2023	vs.	"Now" December 2025

How do mortgage carrying costs compare given the decline in interest rates?

As illustrated in the above chart, the monthly mortgage payment declines from $3,179 to $2,415 (-24%) when comparing December 2023 to December 2025.

Total interest paid over the 5-year term declines from $150,996 to $97,299, and the mortgage balance at the end of the 5-year term also declines ($506,690 to $454,836).

How have these lower interest rates impacted your borrowing power?

Based on the average price of a condo apartment in December 2023 (with 80% financed through a mortgage of $546,426) a buyer needed an approximate household income of between $121,000 to $137,000 to qualify. The same buyer looking to purchase an average price condo apartment in December 2025 (with 80% financed through a mortgage of $502,423) would need a household income of approximately $96,000 to $109,000 to qualify.
