I started volunteering at Milo Coding Academy when I was attending WMU. There, I helped kids discover what they can do with programming.

It's amazing to see kids learn about programming at a younger age than when I did.

Volunteering at the academy reminded me how abstract some of these concepts are and helped me communicate with non-IT clients at my internship. It was so inspiring to see these underrepresented kids' talents flourish by introducing them to computer science and tech that I decided to volunteer again.
