

Franz Engel

16th September 1898 (Vienna)

Franz Engel was well-known in both Vienna and Berlin and played in the most popular variety and cabarets in Vienna and Berlin, such as the Simpl, Die Hölle and Moulin Rouge. He was one of Vienna's cabaret greats and almost forgotten in Austria after the National Socialist era. Only a few of his texts and couplets were re-released, in contrast to other greats before 1938, such as Armin Berg, Karl Farkas or even Fritz Grünbaum, with whom he shared the same fate. He was married to Paulina Hermann.

Sporadically, Engel also played in German and Austrian film comedies, such as in 1930 in Carl Lamac's Der Falsche Feldmarschal and 1931 in Otto Preminger's Die große Liebe.

Between 1930 and 1938 Engel issued a number of records for the Austrian branches of His Master's Voice and Columbia, for example, with well-known cabaret colleagues. Today, they are valuable testimonies to cabaret in Vienna in the First Republic.

In 1933, after the seizure of power by the National Socialists in Germany, Engel had to flee because of his Jewish denomination. He returned to Vienna, where he had to flee again in 1938 after the Anschluss. He first arrived with other cabaret artists to Paris, where he was in 1939 together with Erwin Saldern and Fred Berger part of the formed by Karl Farkas exile cabaret group "Vienne à Paris". He then fled to the Netherlands, where he was interned after the German occupation of the Netherlands in the transit camp Westerbork. There he worked on the theatre productions produced by Willy Rosen. Along with other members of the Prominenten Theatre Group, he was imprisoned in Westerbork Transit and Concentration Camp in Northern Holland. From there, the Nazis deported him to the ghetto at Theresienstadt, on Transport XXIV/7, as number 163 on September 1944. He was there for a few weeks and then transported to Auschwitz on 16th October 1944 on Transport Er as number 1052 to Auschwitz, where he was murdered upon arrival, probably the next day.
