Ann-Marie Murrell

Career Highlights:

Ann-Marie Murrell has worn many hats—author, editor, journalist, political commentator, and media producer. But when both of her parents were diagnosed with Alzheimer's, she stepped away from her Los Angeles life to become their full-time caregiver in East Texas. Later, after facing her own diagnosis of Early Onset Alzheimer's, Ann-Marie knew she had to write Walking Each Other Home: A Caregiver's Journey of Grace along with a companion devotional and journal. Drawing on her deep faith and firsthand experiences, she shares a raw, heartfelt, and honest journey of caregiving in the face of dementia. Her writing is both spiritual and practical, offering a lifeline not only to other caregivers walking the same path, but also as a lasting legacy for her own children. Dreama Denver

Keeping the Dream Alive

Actress, writer, radio station owner and personality Dreama Denver met her husband of almost 30 years, television icon Bob Denver (Gilligan of Gilligan's Island, Maynard G. Krebs of Dobie Gillis), when she was cast as his love interest in the Woody Allen play, "Play It Again, Sam". After marrying the popular television personality, Dreama continued her acting career, appearing in a Gilligan's Island reunion movie with Bob, co-starring with him in a TV pilot titled "Scamps" and touring the U.S. and Canada successfully and happily with her husband for over a decade.

The birth of the Denver's son Colin, diagnosed with severe autism, changed everything for Bob and Dreama, who retired from show business and moved back to West Virginia to devote the next two decades to Colin's full time care. During this time, the pair also founded The Denver Foundation, which honors their son and is dedicated to assisting special needs children and their families.

"The Denver Foundation and Little Buddy Radio, a nonprofit radio station owned and operated by the Foundation, were Bob's last and most important legacies," Dreama says, "and making these two entities as successful as possible became my mission after Bob passed away. His desire to give back to West Virginia was huge. He loved this area, considered himself an adopted West Virginian and was a tireless ambassador for the state. Regardless of how important and far reaching his television legacy was, and is, his love for our son and his desire to help other families like ours trumped even that."

Since Bob's death in 2005, Dreama has discovered new passions and new directions in which to take the foundation. Founding Always Free Honor Flight, WV's first Honor Flight program, honoring WV veterans with free trips to Washington, DC to visit the memorials built to honor their service is especially close to Dreama's heart, as is the Denver Foundation's Always Free Walk of Honor, installed and dedicated as a poignant addition to the War Memorial and Museum in Princeton.

Leading the effort to have John Denver's "Take Me Home Country Roads" adopted, successfully and unanimously, as an official WV state song ranks as one of the proudest days of her life, rivaled only by being chosen one of West Virginia's Wonder Women by WV Living magazine. The American Legion Riley-Vest Post #9 honored Dreama with their Outstanding Citizen Award in 2014 and in January 2015, the Princeton Mercer County Chamber of Commerce chose her as Citizen of the Year. In March of the same year, Dreama was honored once again with the Sons of the American Revolution's Outstanding Female Citizen of the Year.

Dreama's memoir, "Gilligan's Dreams", recounting her almost 30 year marriage to Bob, recently received the prestigious Ella Dickey Literacy Award, given to authors who've preserved history through their written work. Her memoir is her love letter to Bob and her gift to Bob's fans. In detailing the Denver's Hollywood years, their journey through autism with their son and Bob's courage during the last 6 months of his life, Dreama allows Bob's fans a personal glimpse of the man behind the iconic television characters he created.

"Bob would be proud," Dreama says. "The life I had known for close to thirty years changed dramatically when Bob passed away, but I came to understand that honoring his memory meant living a full and happy life, carrying on the work we started with a heart as big as his."
