

Theorise Education Services

Theorise Ltd is an innovative and ambitious Edinburgh-based educational recruitment business that has grown to be Scotland's largest supplier of additional non-medical personal help (NMPH) support staff services to further and higher education.

Theorise provides a range of different roles to colleges and universities including Study Skills Tutors (for dyslexia, dyspraxia, and other specific learning difficulties), Mental Health Mentors, in-class ASD/ADD/ADHD Support Workers, Note-Takers, Proof-Readers and Examination Support Staff. Theorise Ltd is recognised for our excellent quality of service not only to our clients but also to our candidates and we've built this reputation through a tailored approach that meets each of our clients' individual requirements.

While Theorise continues to grow we still offer a personalised, professional, yet informal approach with a focus on meeting the needs of all our clients and the students with whom we work. Theorise is fully aware that you have a choice but with our focus and determination to giving both Clients and Students a positive experience we hope to be your first choice.

Further education can be a daunting prospect for any student but perhaps more so for those who need additional support, for whatever reason, and we are committed to ensuring they are afforded appropriate support from a suitably qualified and trusted support worker who can assist in their academic progression.

We recognise that sourcing "best fit" support staff can be challenging, but we are confident Theorise has the experience and knowhow to deliver a solution for all students' specific needs. Theorise have a proven track record of delivering excellent candidates for a range of roles, whether it is one person or volume recruitment, we are entirely confident in our ability to meet your requirements.

In the 2022-23 academic year, we provided support to over 1800 students across Scotland, from the Isle of Skye to the Scottish Borders, from entry level courses at colleges to PhD level university education, all of whom have varying specific learning difficulties and support needs.

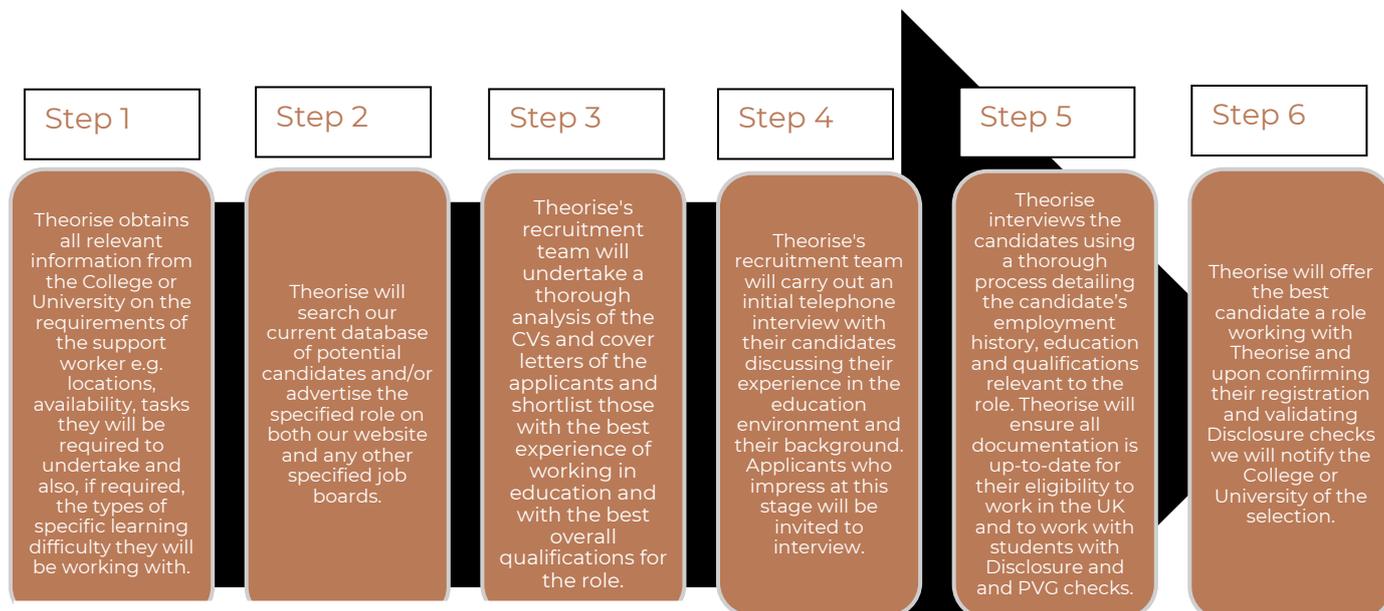

Theorise considers it critical to our success in education that we retain our support workers to ensure students have consistency throughout their studies. Ideally, a support worker assigned to a student in the first year of their course will continue to work with the same student until the completion of their studies.

Theorise firmly believes that consistency is key for students and having the same support worker can assist in their academic progression through the creation of a strong and trustworthy working relationship. Theorise also affords our support staff excellent training opportunities through accredited bodies to further their qualifications to ensure their continued professional development.

"We have worked with Theorise for a number of years now, they continue to provide our students with an excellent standard of support. The team at Theorise are responsive to student needs and concerns and will do their utmost to ensure that each student is supported to their individualised needs. Equally, the team will endeavour to pair up students with an appropriate support worker and if and when a relationship between support worker and student requires a change (which is not the norm) Theorise are more than willing to facilitate that change."
