

Hong Kong - Kadoorie Farm and Botanic Garden

In 1941, there were some 1.25 million people living in Hong Kong. After the end of the Japanese occupation in 1945, the population had dropped to about 600,000. But in that year began the flood of refugees fleeing civil war on the mainland. By the end of 1946, the population living in Hong Kong had swollen to 1.5 million. The brothers, Lord Lawrence and Sir Horace Kadoorie, wished to help these destitute refugees to become self-supporting and independent, to help them attain dignity and security in their lives.

Since most of the Chinese refugees were farmers, it was very desirable for them to be given the means to create their own livelihood. With this in mind, an agricultural project was conceived, and, on 28th September, 1951, the Kadoorie Agricultural Aid Association (K.A.A.A.) was formed with utmost support from the Government. The founding members were Lawrence and Horace Kadoorie, Norman Wright, and Woo Ting Sang.
