From Archives

From the Archives - our clergy were away this week at a retreat at St. Peter's Abbey, Muenster. A very old photo hanging in the Synod Office taken at the time of the fifth meeting of the Synod of the Diocese of Saskatchewan on August 6, 1891, inspired this week's post. The printed meeting proceedings notes that Holy Communion was celebrated by Bishop Pinkham, assisted by the Ven. Archdeacon J.A. Mackay, the Ven. Archdeacon G. McKay, and the Rev. John Hines. Immediately after the Nicene Creed, the Bishop sitting in his chair, read his address. I hope his listeners were comfortable, because it was of some length. He outlined the arrival of a railway to Prince Albert, and two mail deliveries per week. The Diocese had sixteen clergy actively engaged in the work around the communities. Part of his address outlined the importance of preaching. "St. Paul did not give preaching undue importance when he said "Christ sent me not to baptize but to preach the Gospel". Those words still hold deep significance for today's Church. (See photo on Mailchimp).
