Volume 21, Issue No 5

This issue of TRAINER is a very short edition. As can be expected when an organisation is shaken up, the concentration has been on getting IDEST back on track and running seamlessly again.

This has been achieved to a large degree and the day-to-day running has settled down again after busy months in August and September

All quiet on the home front

Since our last full IDEST TRAINER newsletter in July, there has been just about no training taking place. No courses have been run and no new students certificated.

Let us hope that 2022 will see more interest in IDEST training courses again.

This might be a good time, over the winter months, to review how good your website is at promoting the training side of your business.

Transfer of training materials

At a recent Scheme Committee meeting it was approved that IDEST Limited can use the original IDEST training materials. This has been done formally with a letter of confirmation from the Chairman

This will involve the materials being adapted for the new organisation in terms of copyright and logo but not a change to the content.

This change of logo and reference has taken place with the PowerPoint presentations in the Instructors Resources folder in Dropbox. Please ensure you download these new versions for future courses.

The manuals have been sent off to our originator, who is in the process of converting the Instructor Manual and the Student Manual.

Be assured that the content has not been changed at all.

New role for Neil Brock

Scheme Committee recently appointed Neil Brock from Bristol Channel Diving Services to the position of Assistant Training Manager. This role will include supporting Alistair Reynolds, Training Manager, in the running of the training programmes and representing IDEST Ltd at future SITA meetings.
