Biography

Dr. Nandi A. Marshall is a community-engaged scholar committed to maternal and child health equity and preparing the next generation of the public health workforce. She is a Professor in the Department of Health Policy and Community Health and the Associate Dean for Academic Affairs in the Jiann-Ping Hsu College of Public Health at Georgia Southern University. Dr. Marshall holds a BA from Spelman College, an MPH from East Stroudsburg University, and a DrPH from Georgia Southern University. Dr. Marshall is also a certified health education specialist, a certified lactation counselor, and a certified diversity executive.

Dr. Marshall has over 22 years of community engagement experience at the local, state, and national levels, particularly around health inequities. These experiences, along with her completion of the Health Equity Leadership Institute (HELI), the Birth and Breastfeeding Leadership Institute, and the Georgia Governor's Teaching Fellows Program, have fueled her commitment to addressing the social determinants of health through community engagement, breastfeeding equity, and preparing students to address public health challenges through a health equity lens.

Dr. Marshall is compassionate, creative, and solution-driven with experience that has transformed her leadership in the public health and first foods field. She is President-Elect for the American Public Health Association (APHA), where she has also served as the Chair of the Science Board and Co-Chair for the Joint Policy Committee. Dr. Marshall has also served as the Education and Training Co-Lead for the Georgia Society for Public Health Education and as a Co-Chair of the Student and New Professional Caucus for the Society for Public Health Education where she currently serves on the membership committee. She also serves as a member of the CRASH committee for the United States Breastfeeding Committee (USBC), which focuses on equity issues in breastfeeding, the USBC nominations committee, and previously as an APHA member representative for USBC. She is also a board member of the Georgia Breastfeeding Coalition and the Bulloch County Board of Health.

As a community engaged scholar, Dr. Marshall has been involved in securing grants as a PI, Co-PI, and contributor in community-based programming and participatory research, including a Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (2018-present) Racial and Ethnic Approaches to Community Health (REACH) grant, Savannah H.O.P.E., on which she is a contributor leading the breastfeeding continuity of care initiative and a grant from the Georgia Department of Behavioral Health (2019-2023) on which she is the PI to implement evidence-based programming in a Chatham County high school to prevent opioid use. Most recently, Dr. Marshall secured $3.25 Million in funding to assist disadvantaged students with financing their graduate public health degrees. Dr. Marshall has published book chapters, handbooks, and peer-reviewed manuscripts, including a 2023 release focused on amplifying the voices of Black/African American Women regarding barriers to breastfeeding. She also received the 2021 Healthy Savannah Health Innovation Award based on the photovoice project highlighted in the aforementioned article. She is a nationally recognized and invited speaker and is committed equity, service, and advocacy.

Dr. Marshall is a proud member of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc., and a devoted wife and mother of two children.
