How can the three on the council make these decisions before the $42,000 study, the "vision for downtown Chanhassen," has even been completed? Their arrogance was so overwhelming that when Councilwoman Elise Ryan made a motion to stall the final vote on the Aldi/housing development until December when the vision study would be complete, they voted the motion down 3-2 without even considering it.

Like councilors Elise Ryan and Dan Champion, we have concerns a project that our city does not need. I question the idea that the developer gets to decide the economic feasibility for something in our city? What do we think they will say? Shouldn't that be up to you, our elected officials to decide what is good for our community?
