TYPES OF COLOR PRINTING:

4 COLOR CMYK PROCESS PRINTING

- A print process that uses a mixture of 4 colors – Cyan, Magenta, Yellow, and Black (CMYK) to create a wide variety of colors. All four separate colors & print plates are placed one after another on a printing machine. Items to be printed will then be fed through each machine where each color is printed in a series of small dots in order to achieve the desired artwork image. Due to this, CMYK printing has the ability to yield a wider color spectrum.

SPOT COLOR PRINTING

- A print process that uses the PANTONE® matching system's pre-formulated inks. When using this method, it can help yield greater color accuracy on the finished product. Since PANTONE® colors are used with food grade inks when printing on Food packaging products, not all colors can be replicated.

TYPES OF PRINTING METHODS:

OFFSET LITHOGRAPHY

- Standard printing process where a plate with an inked image is transferred to an offset roller. This offset ink roller is then used to transfer the printed image to the printed product.
- Offset printing utilizes both CMYK and PANTONE spot color processes.

FLEXOGRAPHY & DRY OFFSET

- Flexography uses a flexible relief plate similar to a stamp. The plate stamps the image directly onto the material or surface to be printed.
- Flexography uses spot color inks that are formulated to be used with various paper and plastic materials.
- Dry offset method is very similar to Flexography, however the flexible relief plate is first stamped onto an offset roller before being transferred to the final product.
