- Moderated a Dayton Unit NAACP Monthly Community Meeting titled, “An Economic Outlook: CONFIDENT or CONCERN?”
- In the course of the last 12 months, individuals constituting the members of the Economic Development Committee gathered constructive economic pieces of information from academia, a number of governmental agencies and regional municipalities west of I-75. Facts included published community profiles, economic indicators, and emerging trends. Also included in the committees review was specific information with regard to culture and environment, age, job skills and talents, cultivating entrepreneurs, socioeconomic status, and building wealth through home ownership and other real estate matters, retirement and investment planning, and intergenerational wealth distribution.
- The committee emphasized that the process would be driven by data and that the goals and objectives would be both measurable and sustainable. They also wanted the goals and objectives to be focused, intentional, and predictive. Another necessary component was to incorporate three critical elements of National NAACP Economic Development Initiatives; empower, ensure and grow.
