Sunday, 20 February 2022 – 1:00 West Martello

The KWOS will hold its February meeting on Sunday, February 20. Rochelle Eannarino, our Plant Chairman, will make a presentation on orchid growing in Key West, focusing on repotting. There will be a raffle, but there will be no plants for sale. The presentation starts at 1:00PM; but get there early for raffle tickets, socialising, and looking at plants brought in by members.

We are a month away from our orchid fair. Posters for the fair will be at the meeting, as well as the new hats, which will be for sale. We an accept credit cards for sales as well as for dues. Again, we will have signup sheets for the fair. We still need volunteers for set-up and take-down, as well as working the two days of the Fair.

There will be forms for members who have plants to sell, and for show. Members should be preparing their plants now.

Notices

Orchid Notes

In driving around Key West during the past month, I've seen huge displays of orchids in private gardens, which is testimony to the early season. Usually these sort of displays reach their peak in March. Here are a few examples:

What these photos don't show is the damage the iguanas are already doing to all the orchids. Although they have been kept at bay by the cold weather, the moment it warms up – tomorrow – they will be back, and hungry. I've seen some trees wrapped with metal collars, which prevent the iguanas from taking hold of the trunks. It's a very effective measure but only if there are no other trees adjacent. My only untouched orchids are those on a triangle palm, which is wrapped in a metal collar.

January Meeting

Jay Pfahl made a presentation on his extended 2020 trip to Colombia, highlighting the new variety of orchid he found at that time.
