

How fit are you really? If you were compared to the top Olympic Athletes and Navy Seals, how would you really score?

You can now determine that with the H.R.V. Fitness Test. This is a fully automatic, non-invasive, computer based system designed to assess your nervous system using heart rate variations.

The test was developed on scientific and medical research conducted in Russia, Germany, France and the United States over the past 30 years. The system of analysis was designed by Alexander Riftine; Ph.D.

Testing conducted at Columbia University Medical Center confirmed the System to be over 95% reliable and accurate in its assessment when compared to industry standards.

This health fitness test allows precise results for determining the level of physical fitness of your body. This test not only determines your QUANTITY of health but also your QUALITY of health.

The analysis allows for a great deal of information to be compressed into a simple picture. The assessment performs 448 heartbeat analyses; or 448 EKG's. This allows for greater accuracy in finding heart problems than a regular physician might find doing a normal EKG. You have 448 chances to find it as opposed to the few most doctors will do in a routine EKG.

The main components that determine "health" are:

- 1) Heredity Potential
- 2) Degree of Physical Fitness
- 3) Current Mental Health
- 4) Internal And External Stresses

The key advantage of this method is that it accurately detects early development of a disease. This tool will help recognize a potential health problem long before your physician would pick it up in a routine examination. Thus, the test becomes an objective tool for early intervention to a disease or illness, long before you would complain of symptoms.

Evaluation requires measurement of your heartbeat lying down and standing up. The computer then analyzes the similarities and differences between the two. It then gives you both a graphic indicator as well as numerical value of how healthy you are (or aren't).
