The pals talked about their kinship with each other and with all life on earth.

Kamaal said, "Let's draw pictures of our kinship with the whole universe."

And the kinsfolk did.

Then it was time for the kinsfolk to say goodbye. They promised to remain friends forever.

Draw a picture of our universal kinship and send it with a letter to a friend you have or would like to have in another state or country.

Chapter 2

"The party is wonderful," laughed Michaelene.

"We're meeting old friends and making new friends," said
Tex.

"I like playing the new games we're learning from our new friends," laughed Nicole.

Bob and Natasha led the guests in singing silly songs.
They all laughed a lot. Then they ate many new and different foods.

Naguib and Pam talked about their families. Keno and Charles talked about their countries. Kyoto and Muse talked about their continents.

The Boardwalk

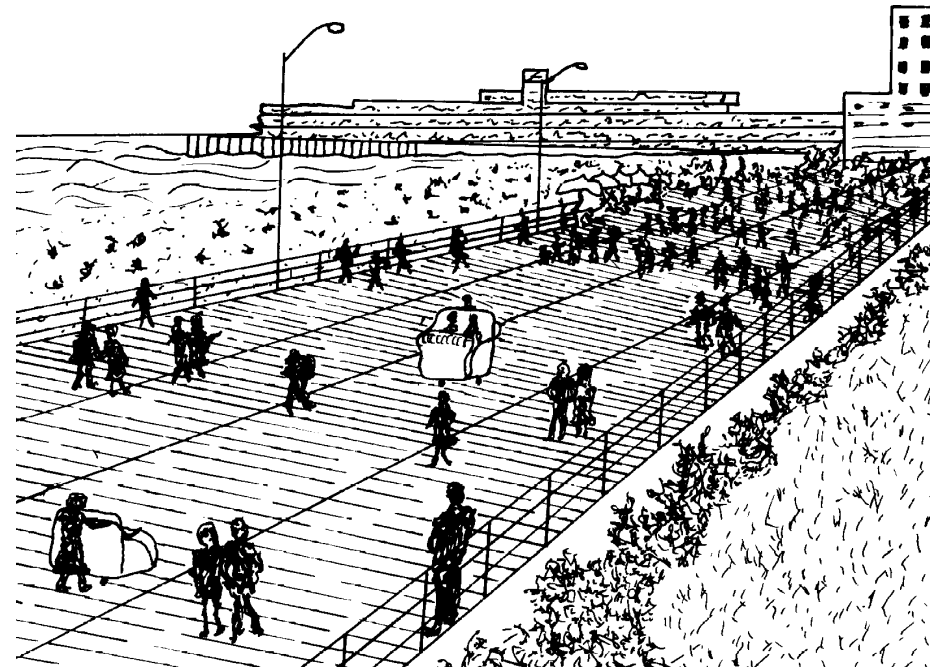

Kamaal, his sister Angela, and their parents Dr. and Mrs. Kyrala were walking. They were walking along the Boardwalk.

The Boardwalk is a wooden sidewalk next to the Atlantic Ocean in Atlantic City. The Kyralas felt a soft breeze from the ocean.

They heard a voice from behind them say, "Hi, Angela and Kamaal! Hello, Dr. and Mrs. Kyrala!"

The Kyrala family turned around. There was their friend Steve!

Steve was with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Choctaw. They were riding in one of the Boardwalk's rolling chairs.

A tall woman was pushing their chair. She smiled at them. The woman had on a wonderful rainbow-colored hat.

"What a lovely surprise meeting you here," said Mrs. Choctaw.

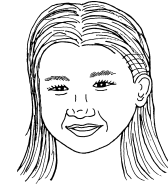

The tall woman stopped pushing the chair. Mrs. and Mr. Choctaw stepped out of the rolling chair.

"Angela and Kamaal, would you like to ride with Steve?" asked Mr. Choctaw. "Mrs. Choctaw and I will walk with your mother and father."

So Kamaal and Angela hopped into the rolling chair next to Steve. The pals rode in the rolling chair. They told silly jokes all along the Boardwalk.

Draw a picture of the tall woman with the rainbow-colored hat or write a story about her.

There are guests from the continent of North America.

Pam's cousin Louise is from Alaska and their friend Keno is from Canada.

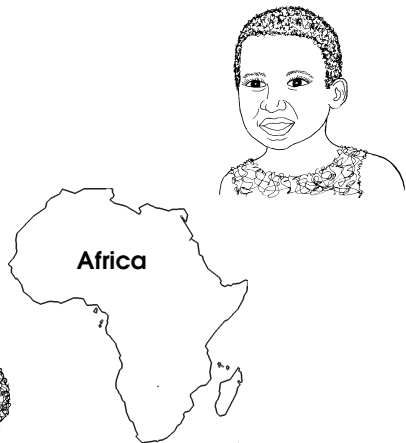

Some of the guests from the United States are Sum, Steve and Angela.

Liz's friends are Octavio from Mexico and Violeta from Central America.

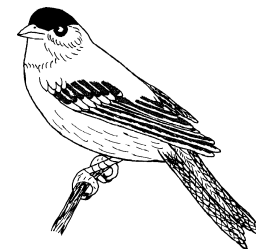

A lot of other pals are at the party too.

Find the location of each continent on a world globe or map.

Bob's cousin Swazila and her friend Naguib are the guests from the continent of Africa.

Violet

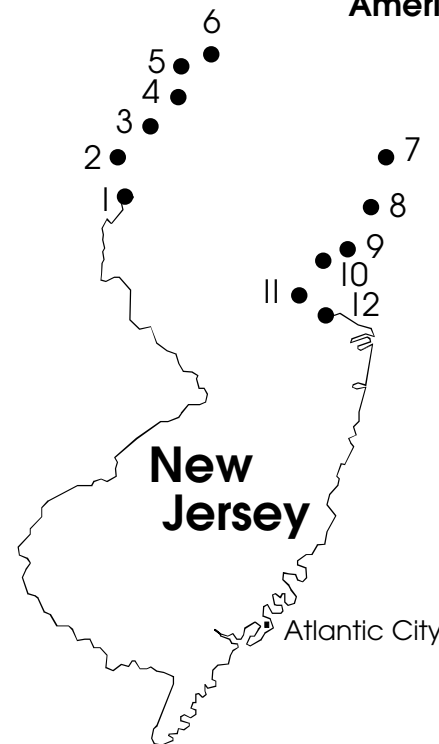

American goldfinch

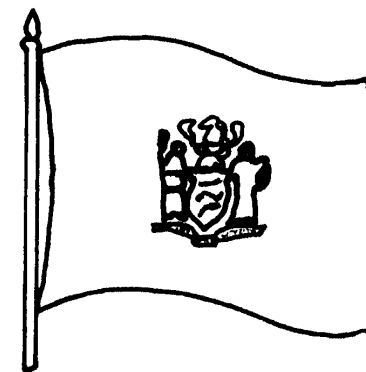

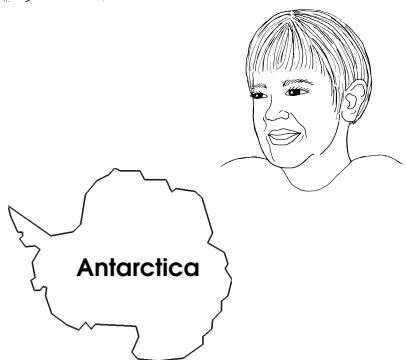

Tex's cousin Joaquim and his friend Inca are the guests from the continent of South America.

Northern red oak

Liz's friend Elias visited the continent of Antarctica but it is too cold to live there.

The Eagles

The huge nest was in a tall tree. It was an eagle's nest in Bombay Hook Refuge.

Mama and Papa Eagle had beautiful brown feathers. Their head and tail feathers were white. When the sun shone on their white-feathered heads they looked bald.

Papa and Mama had woven large branches together to make the nest. Then they softened it with leaves and moss. Two yellowed eggs were in the nest.

Inside one shell was Annie, a baby eagle, called an eaglet. She had a little tooth Steve's friend Victoria and her friend Kudrum are the guests from the continent of Australia.

Sum's friends Kyoto and Natasha represent the continent of Asia.

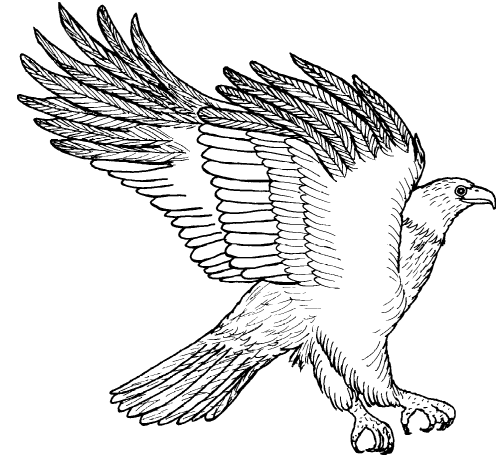

Muse's friend Charles and his cousin Heidi are the guests from the continent of Europe.

Children, Today's Joy and Tomorrow's Hope

Chapter I

The doors to the White House are open.

A banner over the door sings, "Welcome, Children - Today's Joy and Tomorrow's Hope."

The guests are children from the earth's seven continents and from many of its islands. George and his grandparents, Ms. President and the First Gentleman welcome their guests.

The party begins!

at the end of her beak. It was shaped like a knob. Annie used this tooth to tap on and crack her egg. Finally she cracked the shell and wiggled out.

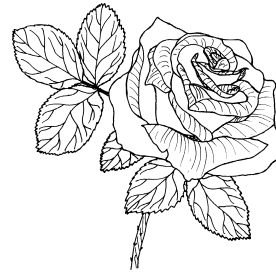

Annie was very small. Her eyes were still closed. Mama Eagle cuddled her. Soon Annie's brother, Dover, was free of his shell too.

Both eaglets huddled next to Mama. Papa was kept very busy feeding the two eaglets fish and snakes.

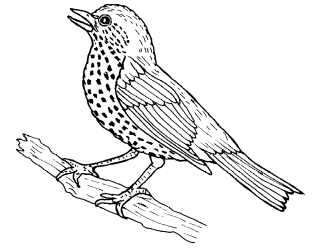

The eaglets grew quickly. The knob tooth fell off from their beaks. Their soft down changed to beautiful feathers. Annie and Dover hopped around and flapped their wings.

Then one day the eaglets' wings were as strong as their desire to fly. Annie and Dover sprang into the air. Their wings swept them high into the blue sky. The young eagles felt . . .

What do you think the young eagles felt? Write a story about it.

Ms. President laughed. Then quietly she said, "You children are today's joy and tomorrow's hope."

The First Gentleman smiled at his grandson, "You children are our hope for a more peaceful and loving world."

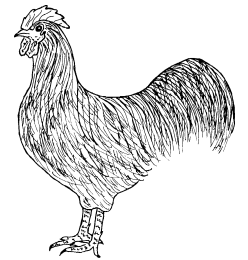

"Well, I hope you won't leave all the work for us to do," said George.

"We won't, George," said the President. She hugged her grandson and said, "Everyday we work for peace. We hope for friendship."

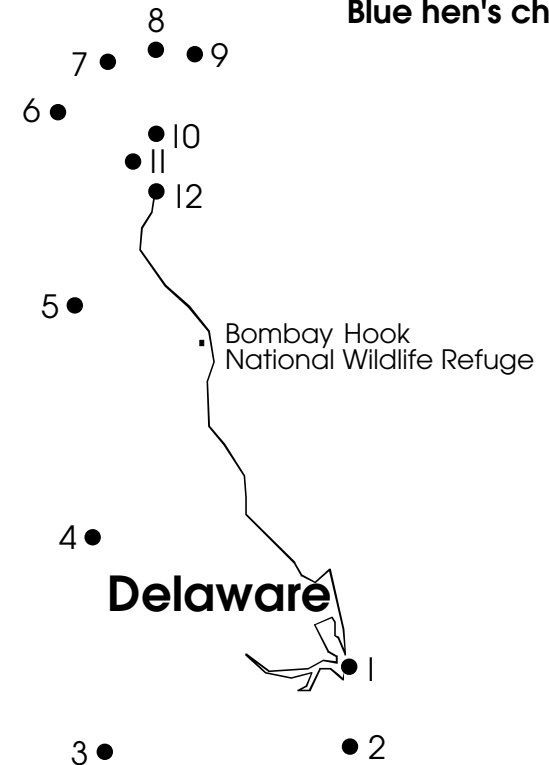

What can you do to make our world a more peaceful and loving place? Write a letter to your family, governor or president with suggestions.

The Airplane

Captain Sammy, his niece Angela, and his nephew Kamaal were visiting Andrews Air Force Base. Captain Sammy was a pilot and Dr. Kyrala's brother.

They were looking at the huge, shining airplane named "Air Force One." The big aircraft sat on the airfield. The plane was poised like an eagle ready to soar.

"Gosh, Uncle Sammy! The President of the United States' airplane sure is big!" said Kamaal.

"Yes, it is," said Captain Sammy.

"Where is your puppy?" asked the President.

"Bubba is outside playing in the Rose Garden, Grandma. After I eat, I'm going out too," said George.

"Well, have fun. But don't forget our party this afternoon," said Ms. President.

"Grandma, I wouldn't forget our party!" laughed George. "A party for kids! What did you say about us?"

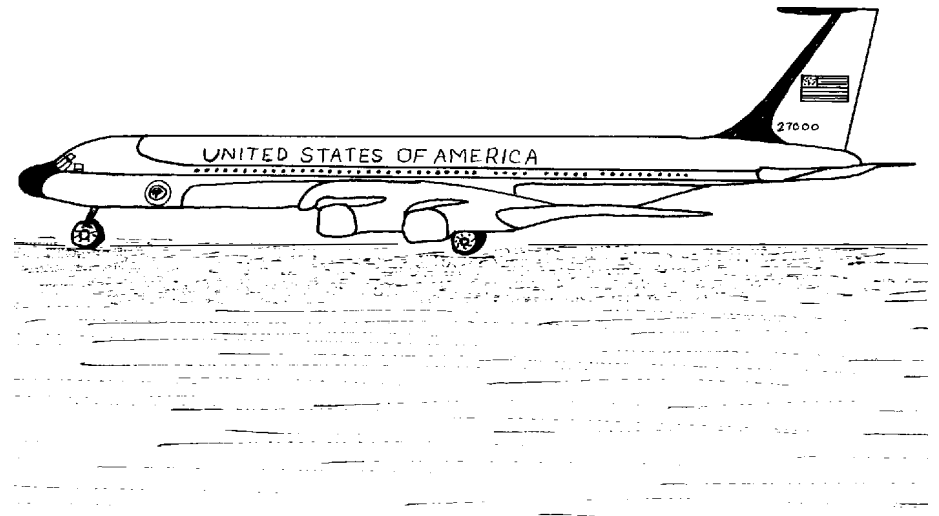

The White House

It was morning at the White House. Ms. President and her husband, the First Gentleman, were having breakfast in a cozy, sunny room.

"Good morning, Grandma. Good morning, Grandpa," said a little boy skipping into the room. "Listen! Don't you love the birds' pretty songs?"

"Good morning, sweetheart," said the President of the United States. She kissed her grandson George's curly head. "Yes, the birds' songs are lovely."

"Good morning, George," said his grandfather, the First Gentleman, giving him a hug. "Sit down here and have some breakfast."

"The President must take care of important business on Air Force One," said Angela.

"The President must have a lot of fun on it too," said Kamaal.

"The President does take care of a lot of business on the airplane. And yes, the President can relax on it too," said Captain Sammy.

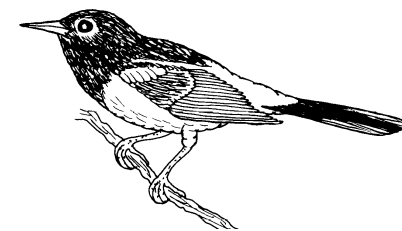

"I'd like to build an airplane," said Kamaal. "Only I'd make it a lot bigger and better."

"How would you design an aircraft, Kamaal?" asked Captain Sammy. "What would it look like? What would you put in it?"

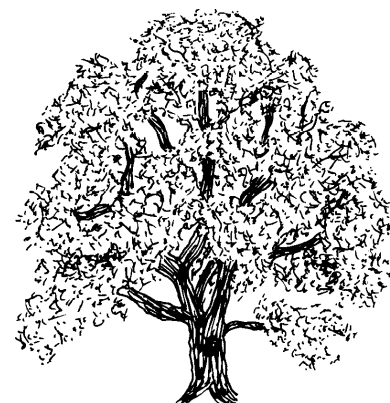

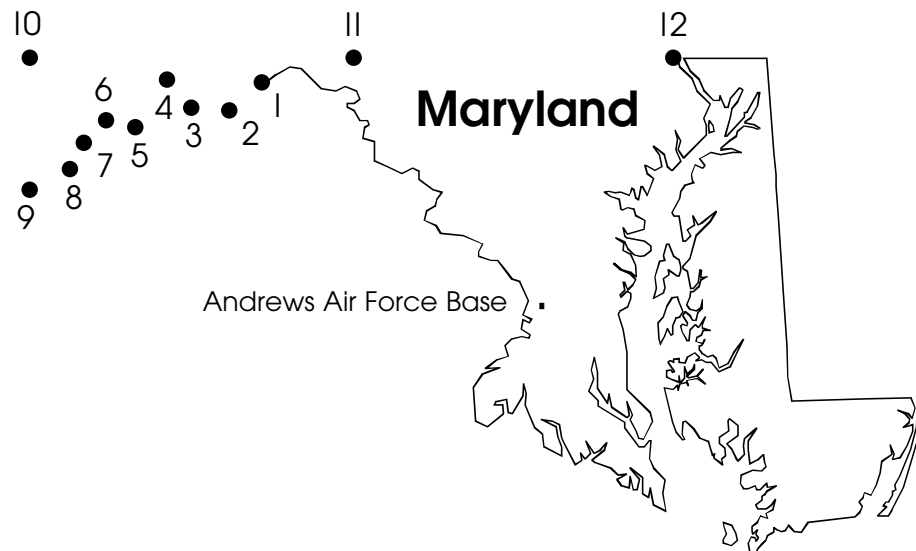

Design and draw an aircraft you would like to fly in.
