

Healing with Auriculotherapy

What is Auriculotherapy?

Auriculotherapy is a technique of using points on the skin of the auricle (external ear) to diagnose and treat pain and medical conditions of the body. Also referred to as Auricular Medicine, practitioners all over the world use this therapy to treat pain, addictions, and internal disorders with excellent results.

Efficacy

Whether used in conjunction with another treatment modality, or by itself, auriculotherapy is often effective when other treatments have failed. Best of all, it is safe, non-invasive, and virtually free of side effects.

How does Auriculotherapy work?

Specific points on the ear have been mapped for the treatment of specific problems. These points, when stimulated, often have positive effects on the target area of the body.

The exact mechanism by which points on the ear affect other parts of the body is subject to ongoing research, and several theories are currently under investigation.

Why does my practitioner use Auriculotherapy?

Used by itself or in conjunction with other forms of treatment, Auriculotherapy is a very safe and often effective form of treatment. Side effects are extremely low because, as a natural form of treatment, Auriculotherapy does not involve drugs or surgery. Your practitioner's choice to use Auriculotherapy for your condition is evidence of a commitment to provide the best possible treatment in the form of a safe, natural therapy.

What can Auriculotherapy treat?

Auriculotherapy is most commonly used for pain control, addictions and cravings, weight loss, and help with mental or emotional problems. Points and protocols exist for the treatment of many internal disorders as well. Because auriculotherapy can address any part of the body, nearly any problem can be treated by Auriculotherapy as a primary or complimentary form of care.

What should I expect?

Your practitioner will usually begin by inspecting certain points that may be related to your problems or chief complaints by probing either one or both of your ears.

The ears may be checked by visual inspection, palpation, or electrical testing. When therapeutically active points are located, they will be treated with one of several possible treatment methods, including electrical or laser stimulation, pressure, taping of a tack or seed to the skin, or insertion of very small acupuncture needles.

The only auricular acupuncture available at this time is AcuDetox (NADA). Inquire within.

How quickly can I expect relief?

Auriculotherapy often produces very rapid results. Some treatments take effect immediately, while others are cumulative in nature, becoming increasingly more effective over time, with more treatments.

Auriculotherapy treatments available:

Alcoholism, allergies, anxiety, asthma, bladder control, constipation, depression, drug addiction, gall bladder, headache, hemorrhoids, hyperactivity, impotence, insomnia, knee pain, PMS, shingles, sinusitis, smoking withdrawal, sore throat, stuttering, toothache, vision problems, weight control, and many more. Contact Ramona Christine for more information.

Is Auriculotherapy painful?

Auriculotherapy is generally very comfortable. If your practitioner uses electrical stimulation, you may feel a mild electrical sensation. If a needle is used, you may feel a small needle prick. Others forms of treatment, like laser, may not produce any sensation at all.
