Reflection: Unity Begets Mission

Unity is the key to unlocking the Christian mission. When a group of people share one heart and one mind, there is nothing they cannot achieve. St. Paul understood the importance of unity in advancing the kingdom vision. If Christians are to be Christians in name and deed, if they are to attract people to seek Christ, the world must see them as united. Here, we are not primarily discussing ecumenism between denominations. We are speaking about unity within our own parish and immediate faith communities.

It is worth remembering that it was in Antioch that the believers in Christ were first called "Christians" (Acts 11:26). Why was this significant? Because in Antioch, Jewish and Gentile believers lived and worshipped together in such harmony that outsiders recognized them as belonging to Christ. Their unity was so evident, their love for one another so striking, that they needed a new name to describe this remarkable community.

St. Paul identifies one of the primary causes of division within the Body of Christ: stratification by gift. Some people feel more important than others due to their roles within the Church or their particular talents. But this must never be the case. God has called us differently and uniquely, each for a specific purpose in his grand design.

Consider the beautiful diversity within our parish community. Some dress the altar with care and reverence, some proclaim the Word at Mass, some clean the Church until it shines. Some keep our social media presence vibrant and welcoming, and others have smiling faces that greet people at the door. Some quietly remind parishioners about Mass times, others teach the faith with patience and wisdom. Some have the gift of making the priest laugh after a difficult day, while others possess the keen eye to identify what the Church needs. Some have the practical skills to fix things, others have the fortitude to sit through long meetings discussing parish affairs. Still others have the compassionate heart to mourn with those who mourn.

None can take the place of another. Have you ever caught yourself saying, "If only Mrs. Smith were here, this would have been sorted"? This reveals that each person's gift is unique and irreplaceable. We are not interchangeable parts in some machine. We are living members of Christ's Body, each contributing something that no one else can offer in quite the same way.

So, St. Paul encourages us not to allow any disagreement to fracture the unity of our parish community. The Body of Christ carries out its mission of evangelization on the principle of "Different gifts, one Spirit, one mission." When we stand together, celebrating our differences rather than competing because of them, we become an irresistible witness to the transforming power of Christ's love. Our unity itself becomes our evangelization.
