Iran, France Context

Iranian protesters and the Iranian government fought. It is not recommended to fight governments to the point of warfare. We are clearly witnessing this in many places around the world, including the USA. We don't recommend this, and certainly, targeting members of the military is not wise. We feel France is an example of protesters who chose warfare. We are lucky to live in the places we do; however, there are no guarantees for a people who choose foreign regimes instead of us.

Threats Made Against the West, As Cheered On

We are confirming that this is a "migrant civil war."

We are witnessing mass attacks against White natives in America and in France. These events are very traumatizing. Often, the White natives are attempting to protect their homes or others. This is one of the reasons why we are advocating two things: full separation from any terrorist activists or terrorist activist movement, and partnering with trusted agencies that are actively mitigating the violence against innocent civilian populations and our homes.

We see these not as protests, but as civil wars. The damage and violence the activists are causing is historic and catastrophic, reaching atrocity and crimes against humanity levels. They are actively threatening innocent civilian populations, including through arson, looting, lynchings, assaults, gun violence, and murder. Those attacks are not protests; they are acts of war and meet the criteria. Throughout our research and casework, we anchored this understanding, that these are wars and not protests, that many of the more extreme activists have violent and genocidal intentions rather than peaceful intentions.

Homeland Defense Movement

We are in the separation and departure stage. We do not support unnecessary violence, but we certainly support defense. If civilians are being targeted, we support their right to defend themselves.

We reject leftist slogans, ideologies, and anti-White hate. No more tolerance, no more sympathy. No apologies!
