Author's Designation

With experience as an honorably retired post-9/11 veteran, dedicated paralegal engaged in investigative work, practitioner of peace and conflict studies, former Homeland Security and Combat Communications specialist, women's anti-human trafficking safety coach who has worked with more than 3,000 women, many of whom have been victims of heinous crimes, provider of support to both men and women, and more than five years of analytical research encompassing thousands of articles and extensive study in the field, together with ongoing communication with military personnel, law enforcement, and other public servants, I have developed and designated the following nomenclature.

This designation draws upon existing governmental, military, and law enforcement nomenclatures, including terms such as the War on Terror, the War on Drugs, and the War on Immigration Fraud, while introducing a new designation intended to strengthen our collective anchor, understanding, and sense of purpose. It is meant to help citizens and public servants recognize these issues, improve our bearings as we address substantial challenges, encourage meaningful discussion, and support our shared responsibility to safeguard our communities, our institutions, and ourselves.

The designation presented in this publication is an original designation established by the author. It is intended to serve as a common point of reference for discussion, education, investigation, strategic communication, and public understanding throughout this work. The designation is offered to strengthen our shared language, support understanding, encourage cooperation among citizens and public servants, and reinforce our commitment to protecting our communities and our nation.
