

Why is Democratic bias so extreme?

Imagine, a climbing one third of the population being immigrants or first generation Americans, yet being completely exonerated from wrongdoing, including crimes against the local native population, while the narrative is still pushed that only Americans, particularly White Americans, commit these acts. This is why Democratic ideology feels dangerous to many American people. It often supports others even when wrongdoing is proven. Furthermore, right wing ideology can also be harmful at times. However, people ultimately have a right to defend their territory, communities, and families.

It is also important to note that racism is not reserved to the White population. Racism exists across all races and backgrounds. Vilifying one race while excluding all others from criticism is itself a form of racism. Is the Democratic mindset based on fact and reality? In some ways, yes. Of course there is truth in some Democratic claims. Yet there is also sensationalism combined with a severe lack of accountability.

To be completely forward, there are strange behaviors and troubling individuals in American society, and not everyone resonates with the personalities constantly placed in the spotlight. At this stage in history, many people are examining behaviors and wondering, what on earth went wrong? “What behavior is that? Don’t steal that. Don’t invade local businesses. Don’t insult those people. Don’t behave that way.”

People are arrested in America every day, of all races, creeds, and backgrounds. Often they are released, but sometimes the system pushes back because it has to. Otherwise, violence and crime could spiral further out of control. Crime already has in numerous ways. Being entirely anti police is therefore an extreme bias as well. Extreme ideologies that are not grounded in reality, and belief systems that are forced onto the public despite the risks, cause severe societal harm.

Republicans often place greater emphasis on supporting law enforcement, the military, firefighters, crime prevention, and anti trafficking efforts. Many are involved in churches, and despite opposing mass illegal immigration, numerous churches still donated significant time, money, and aid to immigrants without asking for recognition or praise. They gave simply out of compassion and goodwill. Perhaps, however, it is time for some acknowledgment of those churches and communities that are increasingly targeted or ignored by Democratic politicians, media figures, and activists. With the surge of church targeting, it is clear the relationship between these groups has clearly deteriorated.

Maybe it is time to let go of the abusive cycle. After all, healthy relationships require mutual understanding and respect. Constant pressure, abuse and coercion create resentment. But this is not a romantic relationship. The American family is trying to protect itself during forced mass immigration, organized crime and global slavery. They are working tirelessly, to preserve and safeguard their country. They are protecting themselves.

What does self protection and survival look like for the American people?
The reality? Only Americans can answer this question for themselves.
