

National Security Risk and Strategic Failure
Foreign Influence and Domestic Vulnerability
The Left, That Left Their Country

Cowdrey

At this time in our nation's history, current policy directions are placing the United States at increased risk of national security failure and expanding opportunities for foreign adversaries to exert influence.

There is growing concern that gaps in enforcement, oversight, and coordination are enabling criminal networks and weakening support for those serving on the front lines.

I call on Americans to reassess policies that may undermine national stability and to move forward through this period of geopolitical tension with greater precision, discipline, and awareness.

Hold the fort.

Strengthen our defenses.

Change direction.

No more resources diverted away from the American people.

Restore focus. Secure the table.

Those in positions of authority must recognize the seriousness of this moment. Where risks are identified, they must be addressed directly, responsibly, and without delay.

Reserve seats for those who support American security and safety. Where an impasse has been reached, there can be no further delay. American safety is not up for debate.

This is an assertive call for action to protect American national security and reinforce the integrity of our institutions.
